Rooted in Burleson: Meet Your Urban Forester, Dr. Jessie Farris

Growing up in Burleson, I spent countless hours exploring our parks, climbing trees, and enjoying the outdoor spaces that make our community special. Those experiences helped shape my love for nature and inspired a career dedicated to protecting and enhancing the environment. Years later, I had the privilege of serving on the Burleson Parks Board, helping guide the future of the same parks where I spent so much of my childhood. Today, as the City of Burleson's first Urban Forester, I have the unique opportunity to care for and grow the community forest that helped shape me.

Building a Foundation

Trees do far more than beautify our neighborhoods. They provide much-needed shade during our Texas summers, improve air quality, reduce stormwater runoff, support wildlife, conserve energy, increase property values, and improve the quality of life for everyone who calls Burleson home. To realize those benefits across the entire community, our urban forest needs a strong foundation of planning, care, resources, and long-term stewardship.

Since stepping into this role earlier this year, I have focused on building that foundation for Burleson's new Forestry Division while addressing immediate needs throughout our parks and public spaces. Urban foresters do a bit of everything, from fieldwork in the parks to planning and coordination behind the scenes. On any given day, I may be inspecting trees, building inventories, writing grants, planning projects, leading community education, or working on conservation initiatives. As our Forestry Division continues to take shape, my goal is to create a sustainable urban forestry program that will serve Burleson for decades to come, ensuring our trees remain one of the city's greatest assets.

One of my first priorities was securing additional resources to support long-term tree planting and conservation efforts.

efforts. To date, I have secured $25,000 in grant funding through the Texas A&M Forest Service Tree Planting Grant and the Conservation Treasures Grant from the Tarrant Regional Water District. These funds will support urban wildlife habitat enhancements, educational signage, pollinator gardens, and improvements to the Native Tree Trail at Russell Farm. These grant programs have also helped fund the planting of 100 trees throughout Burleson parks and public spaces with the help of community volunteers.

Protecting Our Canopy

2026 marked the launch of the city's first comprehensive tree inventory and management initiative, designed to document, assess, and prioritize care for trees throughout our parks. To date, I have inventoried more than 300 trees across city properties. As the inventory grows, residents will also be able to explore Burleson's urban forest through our online Community Engagement Map. There, each inventoried tree will display its estimated environmental and economic benefits, helping showcase the tremendous value our trees provide every day.

Tree inventories are the first step in improving and protecting the health of our existing trees. Ongoing restoration efforts at Centennial Park, thanks to this initiative include health assessments, soil evaluations, active treatment, and future reforestation planning to improve the long-term health and resilience of one of Burleson's most beloved parks. I have also worked closely with city departments and Capital Projects to provide tree preservation recommendations and proper planting guidance during construction projects, infrastructure improvements, sidewalk replacements, and park development activities. By collaborating across departments, we are helping balance community growth with environmental stewardship while protecting valuable tree canopy whenever possible.

Ash trees are a particularly vulnerable part of our urban forest, which is why I established Burleson's first Emerald Ash Borer (EAB) monitoring program to proactively detect one of North America's most destructive invasive forest pests. Eight green funnel traps have been installed at four monitoring locations throughout the city, including Warren Park, the BRiCK, Cindy Park, and Mayor Vera Calvin Plaza. Early detection will help guide future management decisions, protect ash trees where possible, and prepare Burleson for the long-term impacts of this invasive insect.

Growing Beyond the Parks

Community education and engagement have become some of the most rewarding parts of my role. Through our Arbor Day celebration, the Trees for Tomorrow educational program, urban forestry workshops, school outreach, summer nature programs, and community events, residents of all ages have had opportunities to learn about the importance of trees and their role in creating healthy, resilient communities. This year alone, 25 trees were planted during Arbor Day, and 75 trees were distributed to residents through Earth Day and Arbor Day events, helping extend the benefits of Burleson's urban forest beyond our parks and into neighborhoods throughout the city. Urban forests are part of everyday community life, and they thrive when residents have meaningful opportunities to take part in the work.

Growing Together

Before closing, I want to recognize Parks Superintendent TJ Arthur and the entire Parks Maintenance team. Although the Forestry Division is still in its early stages, their support, hard work, and willingness to jump in on everything from tree plantings and staff trainings to daily forestry projects have been invaluable. Building a new program truly takes a team, and I am grateful for their partnership as we continue growing Burleson's urban forest together.

As someone who grew up in Burleson, I have spent a lifetime watching this community, and its trees, grow. The trees that once provided shade for childhood adventures now stand as reminders of how deeply connected we are to the places we call home. It is a privilege to serve as Burleson's Urban Forester and help steward the same urban forest that helped shape my own story. Together, we are ensuring that future generations will have the same opportunities to explore, learn, and make memories beneath the trees that define our community.

Dr. Jessie Farris, Urban Forester

sethmyres20@gmail.com

I love all things sports and fitness. I grew up playing basketball and running track.

Throughout my years in college my passion for exercise grew, which led me to completing internships at CrossFit and rehab facilities. I graduated with a bachelor's degree in exercise physiology from the University of Mary-Hardin Baylor. I am a certified personal trainer through the National Academy of Sports Medicine (NASM). I look forward to helping others achieve their health and fitness goals, whether they are new to fitness or trying to explore new ways to exercise.

MILES LEWIS

ISSA Certified Trainer

Hello! First & foremost I'd like to thank you for considering me to join you in your fitness journey. I moved here to Texas from Kansas and attended SWAU where I received my Bachelors of Science. I then attended MSU where I attained my graduate degree in Sports Administration. If you're one of my clients, you know I have a compassionate spirit to make every training session an empowering and educational experience through health and wellness. The BRiCK is my home away from home, so I'm sure you'll see me often. I look forward to meeting you and helping you create & establish lifelong healthy habits.

Coach*

Certified Strength & Conditioning Coach

I am a graduate of Texas Tech University (Finance/Economics) who is the Owner/Lead instructor of a safety company, Melrose CPR. My passion is to continue to help educate on the science behind cardiovascular and mental health. Since 2019, I have helped create and operate The BRiCK fitness program called Commit to Fit. My focus is to help people from various walks of life improve their mental and physical health, which ultimately leads to stress reduction.

KELLY RUSSELL

Bachelor of Science: Nutrition

NASM Certified Personal Trainer (CPT)

NASM Certified Wellness Coach (CWC)

Hi! I'm so happy to be here and I can't wait to meet you. After receiving my degree from Texas A&M, I married the love of my life and bounced around the globe per military orders; my best souvenirs are my lovely children. I'm a native Texan so I'm excited to say my roots are now here in Burleson. I knew I wanted to be a personal trainer but also something...more. So I became a Wellness Coach as well so that I could help people reach their goals mentally and emotionally, not just physically. Let's be a team and work together towards your goals.
