Mr. Colin Baenziger
Colin Baenziger & Associates
2055 South Atlantic Avenue, Suite 504
Daytona Beach Shores, Florida 32118

Dear Mr. Baenziger:

Please accept this correspondence as my expression of interest in the position of City Manager for the City of Lake Worth Beach, Florida. I believe I have the seasoned experience the Mayor and City Commission are seeking in an effective manager to provide enthusiastic leadership into the future. My resume is forwarded for your consideration.

My specific skill set aligns very well with the expressed needs of the Mayor and City Commission. I am a forward-thinking, strategic leader and an involved manager with successes in management, financial affairs, economic development and redevelopment projects. I have managed multiple large-scale infrastructure projects simultaneously with proven success. To do so, a manager must be organized with capabilities of excellent communication skills and an achievement orientation.

My broad-based experience includes managing a county and a city located in the Tampa-St. Petersburg, Florida MSA, a county located in the Columbia, South Carolina MSA, and a rapidly growing city in the Charlotte-Concord-Gastonia, North Carolina MSA. I have extensive expertise with economic development and have negotiated multiple deals for my respective cities and counties. Examples include bringing the 1,000,000 square foot Concord Mills Super Regional Mall to the City of Concord, along with 4,000 plus hotel rooms and annexation of the Charlotte Motor Speedway. Both are in the top five tourist destinations of the Carolinas.

My successful redevelopment and historic preservation projects include two downtown commercial districts (Concord, NC and Newberry, SC) and an aging industrial park in Newberry, SC. During my tenure as Port Richey's Interim City Manager, I resurrected the waterfront overlay district and canal dredging projects.

Early in my career I recognized the value of building good management teams, developing solid growth plans and prospects, and collaboration. After creating a great management team in Concord, NC we collaborated with the State and Federal Governments to build the Concord Regional Airport. We used 80% Federal funding, 18% State funding and 2% Concord funding. This successful project now contributes one billion dollars annually to the North Carolina economy. Another similar success in this area is the redevelopment of the Brooksville Tampa Bay Regional Airport and Industrial Complex in Hernando County.

The intriguing challenge for Lake Worth Beach, beyond management of day-to-day activities and infrastructure, is in the realm of redevelopment which will not adversely affect the City's existing historic downtown and its vibrant ethnic and economic base of true diversity. My successful efforts in this area include growing the City of Concord and Newberry County with industrial and commercial parks. In both, the historic/arts downtown districts were able to maintain their integrity with growth focused in other locales within the city and county.

I would welcome a meeting with the Mayor and City Commission to discuss my qualifications and commitment to public service. Thank you for taking the time to review my resume. I can be reached at (704) 796-8889.

Sincerely

RELEVANT LOCAL GOVERNMENT EXPERIENCE

Interim City Manager, Port Richey, Florida

2020-2021

Since June 2020, I have served as the Interim City Manager with all the duties and responsibilities of the City’s Charter. During this period, I worked with the City’s various departments to prepare the FY2020-21 budget. I developed an innovative solution to Port Richey’s capital project funding needs while providing for adequate funding and continuity to the City’s Community Redevelopment Agency (CRA). Most recently I have concentrated on resurrecting Port Richey’s waterfront overlay district physical improvements and canal dredging program.

Jordan Brown Management Corporation, Concord, North Carolina

2019-Present

During this time, I have developed contracts via my management company and my real estate and construction companies. I consult with Prima Luce Energy Systems of North Carolina and Taber Consulting of Tennessee. The former is a new energy development company, while the latter is a multi-use development company. Most recently, I negotiated a contract to serve as the Interim City Manager for the City of Port Richey, Florida.

County Administrator, Hernando County, Florida

2012 – 2019

Hernando County is a county with a population of 188,500 covering 589 square miles. It is located approximately 40 miles north of Tampa on Florida’s Gulf of Mexico coast. The county seat is Brooksville with a population of 7,500, so the county is responsible for serving the remaining population with all usual county and municipal services. This includes water and sewer services to over 60,000 households. It also includes providing contractual solid waste collection services to county residents and operation of the county's landfill and recycling efforts. Also, the County Administrator is responsible for operating a full-service fire and rescue department of about 300 full time firefighters, first responders, and EMTs.

From 2015 through 2018, the Economic Development team managed over 500,000 square feet of new manufacturing space in Hernando County. This includes new companies recruited to come build in Hernando County, as well as expansions. These efforts produced over 500 new jobs and the retention of over 350 jobs. Major expansion projects included Barrette Outdoor Living/AlumiGuard, Flagstone Pavers, Airofog USA LLC, Surge Suppression LLC, Composite Motors, Premier Pharmacy Labs, and Monster Transmissions. New businesses recruited include e-TeleQuote Insurance, Inc., Successful Acquisitions and Baker Parts. Also, ICTC and NCIS elevators expanded creating new jobs. In 2018, we completed negotiations for a new 200,000 square foot cold storage facility for a gain of 60 new jobs. It is known as Frigitek Cold Storage and will be located at the county owned and operated Brooksville Tampa Bay Regional Airport and Technology Center. Throughout this time period, we managed 18 to 25 active projects per year. Hernando County's incentive package for new and expanding businesses totaled $1.5 million and produced a new tax base of over $50 million. These funds are paid to the company over 5 – 7 calendar years.

Within less than six months on the job, Hernando County was struck by several tropical storms and hurricanes. I quickly discovered the county had no bonafide Stormwater Management Plan. In a series of meetings with the County Engineer and the Public Works Director, we compiled the appropriate best available data from past events and secured BOCC approval for development of a stormwater plan based on Best Management Practices (BMPs). To date, the county has accomplished 80% of the BMP goals (7 individual projects). It continues to acquire land for designated retention areas (DRAs) and now employs a stormwater engineer.

Duties and Responsibilities of County Administrator:

- Chief executive officer of a county government with 800 employees in the General Fund, Fire and Rescue, Utilities and Solid Waste, Transportation and Public Works. This also includes emergency management, economic development, planning and land use, parks and recreation, health, social services, human resources, veteran affairs, and stormwater.
- Preparation and administration of the county's operating and capital improvements budget.
- Implementation of Board of Commissioners policies and directives.
- Media representation of the county on television and radio.
- Administration of day-to-day operations as well as long range planning and strategic planning.

Achievements:

- Personally authored/developed Hernando County's first Strategic Plan, along with measurement matrix for progress.
- Spearheaded development of county's first long range road paving and redevelopment plan. Took county from paving only two miles of lime rock roads per year to over twenty miles per year.

- Responsible for development of county's first Stormwater and Flood Management Plan.
- Restructured County's economic development recruitment process and retention efforts to successfully attract new manufacturing companies and to retain existing companies.

County Administrator, Newberry SC2004 – 2006

Newberry is a county with a population of 45,000 covering approximately 700 square miles. It is located adjacent to the Columbia, South Carolina metro area. I-26 traverses the county from Columbia on the east, to Greenville-Spartanburg on the west. This location provides the county with the transportation access to metro airports and seaports necessary to be a major manufacturing center. Also, having borders on Lake Murray and Lake Greenwood has made Newberry County a tourist destination and a desirable retirement community. Both sectors are continually developing.

Duties and Responsibilities as County Administrator:

- Chief executive officer of a county government with over 400 employees and $30 million budget. Oversight responsibility for the following functions: roads, stormwater planning, zoning, economic development, parks and recreation, social services, law enforcement, jails and court facilities, finance, general services and personnel.
- Preparation and administration of County's operating and capital budget.
- Implementation of Council directed policy.
- Media representation of the County including appearances on television and radio, interviews with the print media and preparation of press releases.
- Administration of day-to-day operations as well as long range issues.

Achievements:

- Restored financial integrity to county owned nursing home and assisted living center by refinancing their bonded indebtedness. Reduced the term of 30 years and rate of 8.875% to 22 years with a 4.625% rate which saved the County $10,000,000 over the life of the bonds.
- Received the Bond Buyer's 2005 Deal of the Year, and the 2006 J. Mitchell Graham Award from the South Carolina Association of Counties for the above efforts. Due to use of Special Purpose Revenue bonds not using tax dollars. It was recognized as innovative, creative and replicable. I replicated the deal within six months to refinance the bonds of the county owned hospital thereby saving another $3,000,000 over the life of the bonds.
- Structured acquisition of two new industrial parks for the county comprising over 500 acres. Initially recruited two new industries creating over 200 new jobs and over $50 million in new tax base.
- Recruited Caterpillar to open plant in one of the county owned industrial parks. The new plant was over 600,000 square feet. Initially, over 150 new jobs were created to build generators. More jobs were promised.

- Renovated County’s historic courthouse. Project was over $2 million and took about two years to complete. Included restoring historic attributes and expanding and finishing the basement for new office space and reconstructing the second-floor court room.

City Manager, City of Concord, NC

1985 – 1998

Planning and Community Development Director

1980 – 1985

Concord is a city with a population of 89,891 covering approximately 60 square miles. It is located in Cabarrus County, North Carolina which is centrally located in a multi-county metropolitan area with a population of almost 2 million. The population of Concord, as well as the metropolitan area is well diversified. Concord is home to Charlotte Motor Speedway, while the metropolitan area is a national financial center. Concord is a progressive city with a hometown feel visited by millions of tourists each year.

Duties and Responsibilities as City Manager:

- Chief executive officer of a municipal government with 700 employees and $100 million budget. Oversight responsibility for the following functions: police, roads, stormwater drainage, water, sewer and electric utility, parks, recreation, planning, zoning, finance, general services, personnel, fire and aviation.
- Implementation of Council directed policy. Administration of the city’s day-to-day operations as well as identification and resolution of long range issues. Oversight of the plans to expand the city’s geographic size, population, and industrial/commercial base per the City Council’s adopted goals and objectives.
- Preparation and administration of the city’s operating and capital budgets.
- Negotiation with public and private sector entities on a variety of issues ranging from economic development and growth to service contracts.
- Media representation of the city including appearances on television and radio, interviews with the print media, and preparation of press releases.
- Responsible for the city’s compliance with county, state, and federal regulations such as health, environmental and EEOC.

Achievements:

- Restored morale and built a high performance management team by restructuring and developing existing staff. Eliminated a semi-autonomous utility commission to become more responsive to residents’ needs per City Council. Morale was improved dramatically by bringing these employees under the city’s performance pay plan, and the Council and staff were able to better respond to citizens since we had direct control. Complaints dropped by over 50% within six months.
- Instituted an annual customer satisfaction survey to measure the effectiveness of city services. Integrated the survey into the budget and the performance monitoring process.

- Revamped budget and financial systems. Won the Government Finance Officers' Association's Distinguished Budget Award for twelve consecutive years.
- Restored financial integrity to the water and sewer utility fund. By eliminating the semi-autonomous utility commission, I was able to bring all such operations and budgets under the City Council and City Manager. This allowed us to expand the water and sewer systems to virtually serve the entire county and to triple the size of the electric system. Throughout these efforts, we were able to maintain level utility rates for all three systems.
- Replaced general obligation bonds with revenue bonds to expand the city's water, sewer and electric systems. This was in concert with the City Council's directives to grow the city by statutory annexation. My plans enabled me to meet the Council's expectations to grow the city without raising taxes, from 8 square miles with 16,000 people, to 50 square miles with 50,000 people in about 12 years. My long range plans are still being used by Concord.
- Oversight of planning, financing and development of Concord Regional Airport and Municipal Golf Course. Constructed the $27 million airport in less than 3 years and the $8 million golf course simultaneously.
- Recruitment of Concord Mills and oversight of its planning. Concord Mills is a super-regional shopping center with over 1 million square feet under roof. It is now the number one tourist attraction in North Carolina with the Charlotte Motor Speedway in the top six. When I started the planning for this development, there were no hotels located at this I-85 exit, now there are over 1,000 hotel rooms and over 2 million square feet of retail.
- Privatized solid waste collection and landfill operations. Negotiated contract with BFI that resulted in the city not having to pay tipping fees for the life of the landfill for solid waste originating in the city which hosted their private landfill. This saves Concord over $2 million per year. Initiated city's recycling program.
- Directed efforts to rebuild city's electric system after hurricanes and ice storms. After one hurricane, 90% of city's customers were without power and I led around the clock restoration efforts via mutual aid with other electric cities.

Planning and Community Development Director, Roanoke Rapids, NC
Roanoke Chowan Regional Housing Authority and Redevelopment Commission

1977 – 1980

Duties and Responsibilities:

- Oversight of planning, economic development, community development and public housing for Halifax, Northampton and Hertford Counties.
- Preparation of project budgets, grants and programs.
- Management of daily operations and long-range planning.

Achievements:

- Awarded second Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG) program in North Carolina. This hotel project was the first UDAG project completed in North Carolina. UDAG was a federal program for economic and community development.
- Secured over $2 million dollars in community and economic development programs per year, as well as over $4 million for public and senior housing per year.

BACKGROUND

Since serving as Interim City Manager for Port Richey, Florida, I have focused my attention on other city and county management opportunities. This has also allowed me the time to review my real estate and other business interests. I served the City of Port Richey as Interim City Manager from June 2020 through January 2021. The previous city manager retired, and the city had been without a Finance Director and Human Resources Director for 19 months. Work on the FY 2020- 2021 Budget had not been started, giving me 6 weeks to develop a balanced budget to present to City Council per State Law and the City's Charter. I then concentrated on resurrecting the City Community Redevelopment Agency (CRA), the defunct channel dredging project and jump started the Waterfront Overlay District (WOO) improvement projects. The FY 20-21 Budget for Port Richey is $22 million, and the City has 58 employees.

While serving as Hernando County Administrator, I am proud to have led its economic development efforts for over three years. We recruited ten new industrial companies to build in the County's business parks. More than five hundred jobs were brought to the County with salaries averaging over 125% of the County's median wages. These recruitments added much needed growth to the County's tax base. New businesses include e-TeleQuote Insurance, Successful

Leonard B. Sossamon

Acquisitions, Baker Parts and Airofog USA. Expansion projects include Barrett Outdoor Living/Alumi-Guard, Flagstone Pavers, Surge Suppression, Composite Motors, Premier Pharmacy Labs and Monster Transmissions.

The General Fund budget for Hernando County is $100 million and the total budget comprises $449.5 million. Major projects include wastewater plant expansion at the County's airport, roadway (approximately 30 miles) and storm water (10 - 12 miles) projects. The population of the County is 188,500, and there are 850 employees under the responsibility of the County Administrator reporting through twelve directors.

Port Richey's three most significant issues were and are:

- Adequate funding for the CRA, General Fund and Enterprise Funds. Historically, the City has not made sustainable and consistent wise decisions. An unstable City Council, Mayor and Senior Management resulted in many questionable actions. The former Mayor remains in jail, awaiting trial.
- Updating and replacing substandard and decaying infrastructure such as water and sewer lines, sewer lift stations and stormwater apparatus.
- Expanding and upgrading the City's fire station and fire equipment.

The three most significant issues facing my prior employer, Hernando County were and are:

- Revenue growth. As a bedroom community of Tampa-St Petersburg, the County's population growth has been significant, but the ad valorem tax revenues have not kept pace. This places growing pressure on the General Fund. This problem will become more acute and be exacerbated by the Covid-19 Virus, and the recovery. If this situation creates a depression, Hernando County's home building industry and small retail and hospitality economy will suffer and severely impact property and sales tax revenues.
- Wastewater plant expansions. As more and more subdivisions are developed, the County's regional wastewater plants must be expanded to handle the increased flows.
- Arterial roadways. Several large scale residential and commercial centers have been approved during the past two years. As each is built out, east-west commuting has gotten difficult, leading to citizen complaints and demands for improvements.

GENERAL MANAGEMENT STYLE AND EXPERIENCE

I am interested in being Lake Worth Beach's next City Manager since it has needs that I see as opportunities. Some of my strong suits are strategic planning, comprehensive planning, infrastructure replacements and operational efficiencies. I have extensive experience in development and redevelopment projects, some of which have been public-private partnership projects. I am well versed in emergency management and have guided Port Richey through the challenges of Covid-19. I have oversight experience and expansion experience with a municipal electric system. I have also developed and had oversight of a municipal golf course and regional airport.

While serving as City Manager for Concord, North Carolina, the City Council decided to abolish the semi-autonomous Board of Light and Water Commissioners. This required a Municipal Charter change needing North Carolina General Assembly approval. After the City Council authorized the Charter Amendments by Ordinance, I represented the City at the General Assembly and was successful in obtaining State approval. I then worked diligently to create three new City departments and their respective directors. This involved nearly 400 employees creating City water, sewer and electric departments.

Early in my tenure as County Administrator for Hernando County, Florida I had to merge the Spring Hill Fire and Rescue District's 300 plus employees and organization into Hernando County's Fire and Rescue Department. Governor Scott had just disbanded the bankrupt Spring Hill District. I was successful in merging the personnel and operations of the defunct district into the Hernando County operations.

While working as a City Manager or as a County Administrator, I have always worked to improve the relationships between my jurisdiction and all others. It is another example of my belief and philosophy of team building and regionalism.

Infrastructure renovation, replacement and expansion have been some of my strong points. My successful projects include roads, streets, storm water, utilities, an airport and a golf course. Two of my more unusual successes involved the issuance of Special Purpose Revenue Bonds to refinance the existing debt on the nursing home, independent and assisted living centers, and hospital owned by Newberry County, South Carolina. In addition to saving the County over $10 million, it provided the avenue to make significant improvements to each facility.

My management style is marked by adaptability and resiliency which includes leading by example. While similar, all cities and counties do have differences. A good manager will observe, evaluate and adapt strategies with the leadership staff in order to move the organization forward. No one person has all the answers, so collaboration is a key to success. Using this approach helped me successfully put together a team which acquired the land, designed and built the Concord Regional Airport in thirty-three months.

Open, approachable, caring and a good listener are just a few words my staff would use to describe me. Employees at all levels of the organization have always felt comfortable talking with me whether in my office, or out in the community. Many of my immediate, administrative staff would say that I am tireless and flexible. The public will agree that I have a sincere interest in their well- being and customer service.

Most of my elected officials would say that I am energetic in body and mind, and that I am a knowledgeable and extremely capable manager. They would say my financial acumen is strong and innovative at the same time. As an example, while City Manager in Concord, North Carolina, I came up with an idea to reissue general obligation debt as allowed by state law. I was informed I could only reissue the principle that we had paid off the previous year. We challenged the issue in court and won the right to also include interest retired. Several local governments thanked me for being creative and setting a precedent. During my tenure in Hernando County, I spearheaded 3 upgrades to the County's bond rating.

I feel my greatest strength is my ability to build consensus through collaboration and cooperation. For decades in Hernando County, only money generated by the airport was used for its infrastructure needs, and that money was not enough to expand the roadways to support new economic development on the airport grounds. After some research, I learned the roads and streets located within the airport's 2,400 acres had not been dedicated as public county roadways.

Building a team from the County's Legal, Airport, Public Works, Utilities and Finance Departments (the last of which is part of the County Clerk's Office), necessary rights of ways were identified and properly recorded as public. The result is general transportation trust and gas tax funds are now used to build new and upgrade existing roads on the airport grounds. We could also then use utility funds to expand the utility system and development on the airport grounds became viable to enhance economic development efforts which expanded the tax base and grew job opportunities.

Through patience and perseverance, I was able to convince a large holding company from the Washington, D.C. area to build a 200,000 square foot, cold storage facility in Hernando County. When completed, it will add $35 million to the tax base and employ over 100 people.

My most prevalent weakness was in trusting and giving leadership staff second and third chances to achieve our desired outcomes. I have recognized this "flaw" and now work to be more diligent in evaluating and accepting the capabilities and limitations of the person.

When my staff and I developed the Hernando County Strategic Plan, we decided on several metrics for measuring our progress and success. One was the number of miles of roads paved or resurfaced every year. Another was the number of jobs recruited and retained each year, as well as the amount of new and expanded manufacturing space developed.

I have two achievements (so far) which I consider to be among my biggest and most effective. With health care costs rising for the employees of companies including cities and counties, I decided to go on offense. With my human resources staff in Hernando County, we explored options and settled on developing a County Wellness Center. It proved to save the County and its employees hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly. All constitutional officer employees and employees of the City of Brooksville also joined the Wellness Program. My other biggest achievement is the previously mentioned development of the Concord Regional Airport. I was successful in putting together a great team of Concord staff and consultants to complete the project in less than three years. This airport's annual contribution to the North Carolina economy is over $1 billion dollars.

My first failure was in economic development. Our local Cabarrus County Chamber Executive and I were recruiting a large Japanese electronics company. It would have meant over 1,000 new jobs and a significant tax base. After a couple months of showing sites and making presentations, the company chose another county. We were devastated because we knew we had the best site and location. I learned to not take it personally and that I cannot always win. From that point forward, we were successful recruiting firms like Pass & Seymour, Oiles America, Sysco Foods, and FedEx. Also, I recruited the Mills Corporation to build the Concord Mills Mall which encompasses 1 million square feet of retail space under roof.

Yes, I have had to fire people. I never enjoy the process but realize that it sometimes is the only answer to a situation. I do it with compassion and never in anger.

Challenges facing the next Lake Worth Beach City Manager will include guiding the City through the Covid-19 recovery and the additional strains of the virus. Another challenge will be managing growth from redevelopments while helping the City maintain its identity and outstanding quality of life. I am well versed in the areas of economic development in both redevelopment and new development. I have rebuilt electric systems after hurricanes and have managed major water and sewer system expansion and upgrades. My experience also includes developing affordable housing and coastal management.

I have a reputation of looking for ways to improve operations and finances. Tightening up contracts or rebidding contracts to secure better pricing is a way to ensure the City will receive the biggest bang for the buck. I have successfully refinanced debt and redirected revenues. I did this several times in Hernando County, and I was able to save Newberry County, South Carolina at least $10 million by refinancing its debt on its nursing home, assisted and independent living facilities. I replicated the savings by refinancing the County owned hospital's bonds. This innovative approach won the County several major awards including the Bond Buyers Deal of the Year.

During the first six months, my efforts will include:

- Meeting with staff, elected officials, citizen groups, and where appropriate county/state officials to assess City operations, concerns, positions and dynamics;
- Formulating the appropriate strategic direction based on the City Council's goals and objectives;
- Assessing the City's financial strength and projecting future revenue trends;
- Developing redevelopment strategies and action plans for growing the City's economic base;

Leonard B. Sossamon

- Reviews of current performance measures, and where necessary, developing additional measures that will be used to determine if staff and I are meeting the goals of the organization and City Council, and exceeding the expectations of the citizens.

Working well and extensively with the media is one of my strong points. It is always best to ensure accurate, quality coverage for the citizens we serve. I have had regular meetings with the local press and made appearances on television and radio talk shows to discuss my city or county's progress, particularly in terms of economic development initiatives and recruitments.

While serving Hernando County as County Administrator, I worked closely with the Board of County Commissioners and the County's Public Information Officer to effectively use social media to deliver the County's message. We used Facebook and other platforms including "Survey Monkey".

Most, if not all, public sector managers have detractors. I have had my share. That said, there is nothing true in my background that would embarrass the City.

In my leisure time, my wife and I enjoy traveling. We also cook and bake together. While I was responsible for developing a golf course for Concord, NC, I do not play well or often; but I do enjoy it. My wife and I love long walks on the beach, and the beach music associated with a dance style (Shag) still popular with the Carolina coastal area.

SIX ADJECTIVES OR PHRASES I WOULD USE TO DESCRIBE MYSELF

- Ethical
- Innovative
- Proactive
- Diligent
- Accessible
- Enthusiastic

REASON FOR DEPARTING CURRENT POSITION

I was employed as Interim Manager for the City of Port Richey for an initial six-month period. My contract was extended by City Council for another month, until their new manager could relocate. The permanent manager started on January 19, 2021.

My contract in Hernando County was terminated after the most recent election due to political motives. The County has a long history of using reserves from the General Fund to balance the budget. After 20 years of this practice, and despite repeated warnings from me and other prior County Administrators, the General Fund Reserves have been severely depleted. It was convenient for them to accuse me of not informing the Commissioners of the situation. In actuality, the local newspaper (Tampa Bay Times) recorded at least ten times over the past two years when I did so during Board meetings. Since my dismissal, several citizens have played recordings from those BOCC meetings during public comments demonstrating I had warned the Commission repeatedly.

CURRENT/MOST RECENT SALARY

My final, annual salary at Hernando County was $219,400. My salary in Port Richey as Interim City Manager was $90.00 per hour for a 40-hour week.

Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, 15 U.S.C. 1681-1681Y, credit and bankruptcy information are very sensitive and should not be used in the consideration of hiring. The information is included for each candidate because we do not want you to be surprised if third parties raise what they consider to be a concern. Also, some states have limited the reporting to seven years, so any records older than that will not be available in those states. In addition, motor vehicle reports are limited to three to seven years, depending on the state.

During my tenure as City Manager for the City of Concord, North Carolina, an employee who was dismissed filed a lawsuit against the City, the department head responsible for the dismissal, the City Council, and me as the City Manager. The lawsuit alleged that the former employee was not afforded proper “due process”. The former employee had the suit dismissed by the Court and we were all cleared of any alleged wrongful actions.

Please advise if you have further questions.

Sincerely,

Leonard B. Sossamon

Leonard “Len” B. Sossamon

Will Dittmer – Vice Mayor, City of Port Richey, FL 727-421-0314

Mr. Dittmer has known Mr. Sossamon since June of 2020. They interviewed several managers for the position and Mr. Sossamon really surprised them. Most interims are just seat warmers, but he jumped into the job and they are really happy with his performance.

Because Mr. Sossamon can see many different perspectives, he has good advice. Finding solutions and making good decisions is one of his strong suits. He maintains the organization at a high level and has guided the City through some past difficulties very well.

The most common feedback that they hear from residents about Mr. Sossamon is both surprise and appreciation that he answered his phone when they called. He was very responsive and willing to answer questions and talk about the issues. He was as involved in the community as was possible given the pandemic.

Through personal communication and the agenda Mr. Sossamon kept the elected officials consistently updated. The staff really liked working for him. The organization had several vacancies when he was hired, and they were approaching budget season. In a very short amount of time, he put a budget together that was quite impressive. He was timely in completing assignments in general and he never showed any sign of stress.

They went through a service to find Mr. Sossamon, who did a good job of vetting the candidates. Mr. Dittmer is not aware of any controversies related to Mr. Sossamon.

Mr. Dittmer voted to keep Mr. Sossamon on permanently even though he was not really eligible. Mr. Dittmer would hire Mr. Sossamon in an instant and has thoroughly enjoyed working with him. Mr. Sossamon is a good professional.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Diligent,
- Forward looking,
- Puts in the hours,
- Loyal,
- Cares about the community, and
- Sees the big picture.

Strengths: Organization, repertoire with management staff – everyone appreciates him, good communicator.

Weaknesses: None identified.

Jenny Sorrell – Councilmember, City of Port Richey, FL 314-703-4816

Ms. Sorrell has known Mr. Sossamon since 2020. Ms. Sorrell was incredibly pleased with Mr. Sossamon’s job performance. He kept the Council informed and thoroughly answered every question that she asked him. When he did not know the answer off hand, he quickly researched and provided the information.

Mr. Sossamon was very innovative, and he made good decisions. He was always present in community meetings when he needed to be. From what Ms. Sorrell heard, he communicated very well with the public.

Being customer service oriented, Mr. Sossamon cares about the residents. He demonstrated a good knowledge of the finances and also the wisdom to hire a finance team to take care of items that he did not have as much knowledge in. He has moved the City forward during his tenure, he was very attentive and effectively addressed the issues.

City management is controversial. Mr. Sossamon has most likely been involved in controversies through the course of his work, but Ms. Sorrell is not aware of any details. Ms. Sorrell has not seen anything in Mr. Sossamon’s background or conduct that she is alarmed about. She heard a few comments that some felt he was standoffish, but she does not agree with this assessment. She views him as quieter and more observant, not standoffish.

Ms. Sorrell would absolutely hire Mr. Sossamon and has enjoyed every minute working with him. She had hoped to finish out her term with him as the manager. He works with everybody well and resolved the issues. He stepped into a very difficult situation and did a truly impressive job.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Soft spoken,
- Attentive,
- Competent, and
- Trustworthy.

Strengths: Very soft and calming personality, attentive, good listener, decisive without any issues, excellent leader.

Weaknesses: He trusts people to know how to do their job better than they do, and as such finds himself in a little difficulty at times.

Leonard “Len” B. Sossamon

Cyrus Robinson – Police Chief, City of Port Richey, FL 727-835-0970

Mr. Robinson has known of Mr. Sossamon since 2010 or 2011. Mr. Robinson worked at Hernando County but was not at a high enough level to have much interaction with Mr. Sossamon as the County Manager. They worked together more closely in Port Richey when Mr. Sossamon was the interim City Manager. As such, Mr. Robinson can only speak of Mr. Sossamon’s time in Port Richey. Mr. Sossamon’s performance was good. He is people and detail oriented.

When given a task by City Council, Mr. Sossamon works on it immediately, he does not let it sit. One would never know that he was the interim manager, he hit the ground running and behaved as if he were the permanent manager, he was not a placeholder. He is very timely in completing tasks and he has never been stressed out or appeared angry.

While Mr. Sossamon does make good decisions, he is a nice person with a great deal of empathy. Port Richey held community meetings as well as Council meetings every other week which occurred with social distancing and while wearing masks. Mr. Sossamon attended them all. He also attended meetings for other organizations and advisory boards. He was out in the community. With the public he was the epitome of a southern gentleman. He was cordial and polite. After the meetings he spoke to citizens. He was very responsive when they called and even the Councilmembers mentioned that it was a pleasant change from the last administrator. He actually picked up the phone when called. He was also very good about keeping the Council informed.

Because Mr. Robinson had an extensive background and experience in law enforcement, Mr. Sossamon allowed him to make decisions for the department. Mr. Sossamon was hands off unless he saw something or wanted to suggest an idea for Mr. Robinson to consider. Mr. Robinson kept Mr. Sossamon aware of any changes he was going to make. They both understood that the organization had some long standing problems and they needed to resolve these issues before they could implement any new programs.

They were hired during a tumultuous time when the budget process was starting, the city was preparing to negotiate a union contract and were already under an audit. Mr. Sossamon enlisted the help of the former Hernando County Finance Director and they put a budget together in six weeks. They did not have time to do a few minor items, but the time constraints were ridiculous. He had to meet with the department heads to figure out where to make cuts. The budget was approved, but it was quite the undertaking for someone so new to the organization.

While some controversy involving Mr. Sossamon was documented from Hernando County, you cannot believe everything that you read in the papers. Nothing in his background or conduct would concern a reasonable person.

Mr. Robinson would hire Mr. Sossamon and had hoped he would have been hired as the permanent City Manager in Port Richey.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Detail oriented,
- Personable,
- Polite,
- Good use of time management, and
- Works well under pressure.

Strengths: Quick to complete tasks, hit the ground running, treated the interim position as if it were a permanent position.

Weaknesses: They both came from outside the organization and did not know who to trust. He may have been influenced by the wrong people, but it is not a weakness as much as a matter of circumstances.

Jim Mathieu – City Attorney, City of Port Richey, FL 727-844-5000 215-514-8098

Mr. Mathieu has known Mr. Sossamon since 2020 when he was hired as the interim City Manager. Mr. Mathieu and Mr. Sossamon are both hired by the Council and are therefore peers. Mr. Sossamon’s job performance has been excellent.

Mr. Sossamon’s decisions are well thought out. He maintains an organization at a high level, he is not a change agent. He has been out in the community as much as is appropriate for an interim manager. The residents love him, he did very well in working with the public.

Mr. Sossamon has worked with staff to address resident complaints and policy issues concerning development. He worked with Mr. Mathieu when he had legal questions or concerns. Mr. Mathieu is a part time attorney.

Being responsive, Mr. Sossamon is very easy to get ahold of. He has good financial skills. He is excellent in tense situations, he always remains very poised in a very stressful job. He was overqualified to work in Port Richey as he has worked for much larger organizations.

Everything in Port Richey is controversial but Mr. Sossamon has handled it well. Mr. Mathieu ran extensive checks into Mr. Sossamon’s background, per the Council’s request. Mr. Mathieu spoke to the County Attorney in Hernando as well as others and everyone spoke highly of Mr. Sossamon.

Mr. Mathieu would hire Mr. Sossamon, he is a good manager. They hired him to hold down a fort that had issues, and Mr. Sossamon has done that very well. He has guided them through the issues.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Poised,
- Mature,
- Deliberate,
- Well thought out, and
- Professional.

Strengths: Consummate professional, very poised.

Weaknesses: He has a thick drawl and is sometimes hard to understand. Also, while he knows technology well and can do it, he is not as quick with it as a 20 year old is.

Becky Wood – Human Resources Manager, City of Port Richey, FL 727-835-1269

Ms. Wood has worked with Mr. Sossamon since June of 2020. Mr. Sossamon stepped in as the interim City Manager and performed better than they expected. Normally interims hold the seat, he came in headfirst and got things moving for them.

Mr. Sossamon hired a new Fire Chief and made a great selection. His decisions in general are good. He has worked very well with the public, he has personally gone out into the City to check on issues and situations. He is customer service oriented.

Mr. Sossamon kept everyone informed and he was also good about answering questions. He rallied employees around the vision of the Council. During the audit, he pulled the staff together and kept everyone up to date with information.

Mr. Sossamon has good financial skills and was incredibly responsive. He handled stressful situations very well. He remained calm and resolved issues in a way to prevent these issues from reoccurring in the future.

Mr. Sossamon has not been involved in anything personally or professionally controversial. Ms. Wood does not believe that anyone in Port Richey would disagree with the statements in this reference.

Ms. Wood would hire Mr. Sossamon, he is a good manager. He keeps everything in line, while making work very enjoyable. He ensures that employees are doing their job and that everything is accurate.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Responsible,
- Very respectful,
- Strict when needed,
- Friendly, and
- Personable.

Strengths: Listens to all sides, explains information well without talking down to others.

Weaknesses: None identified.

Wayne Dukes – Commissioner, Hernando County, FL 352-263-8353

Mr. Dukes was the Chairman when Mr. Sossamon was hired and helped negotiate his contract. However, all of the Commissioners liked Mr. Sossamon. He has a robust background compared to others because he had been in the private sector and also served as an elected official. He completely involved himself in the community. He attended chamber and volunteer events. Everyone who knew him liked him for the most part. The few people who did not care for him wanted to control the Commission. Mr. Sossamon earned every one of the outstanding marks that Mr. Dukes gave him in his performance reviews.

In 2012 the federal government wanted to give $22 billion dollars to five states. The Governor of Florida dealt with the money but wanted a member from each County to be in a Consortium. Mr. Sossamon joined the consortium in 2012. He is very smart and has a deep understanding because of his background.

If Mr. Dukes had his way, Mr. Sossamon would still be the County Manager in Hernando. He brought a great deal to the County. They had a close relationship, talked frequently, and attended events together. Mr. Sossamon is solid and sound, an outstanding administrator.

Hernando County will be hard pressed to find an Administrator of Mr. Sossamon’s caliber to replace him. He brought so much to the organization. Even when disciplining employees, he dealt with people in a way where they did not leave feeling bad about themselves. When he gave staff instructions, they knew they needed to do it and he did not have to tell them twice.

The person they had in charge of Economic Development (ED) did not have the right background and was not getting anything done. Mr. Sossamon tried to mentor him, but he did not want to grow and so he resigned. They looked at a few candidates but none of the Commissioners liked them. The Commission asked Mr. Sossamon to take on the ED responsibilities for half the salary of the previous Director. For years he ran economic development while being the Administrator. The former ED Director had a secretary but never gave her the chance to use her skillset or grow. The first thing Mr. Sossamon did when he took over was to allow her to grow. Because of his efforts, she can now be an Economic development Director anywhere.

Reference Notes

Hernando County has a good Human Resource Director and Mr. Sossamon worked well with them. He never picked sides or favorites and he lets employees do their job which was appreciated by the staff. Because of his diverse background he came up with ideas that no one had ever thought of before.

Mr. Sossamon keeps others informed and never wants the Board to be surprised. He worked well with people who have different personalities. When someone is combative with him, his voice changes a little but that is it. He is a true southern gentleman. A community with 4,000 houses and a huge golf course would not work with the Utilities Director and escorted him off the property. Mr. Dukes asked Mr. Sossamon to go with him. They spent a few hours in the community and by the end they agreed with the County. His personality warms up even those who are combative.

The County shared a building with the Courthouse but needed more room. Mr. Sossamon gave them multiple solutions but the Commissioners were not able to make a decision and move forward. He is a problem solver and sees what is coming next.

Hernando was still struggling from the economic downturn and they were in over their head. Mr. Sossamon brought them multiple solutions but none of the Commissioners listened. Hernando County has constitutional offices like the Sheriff's office which receives 52% of the budget. The Sheriff is very close to two Commissioners. When a reduction in force was presented, the Commissioners protected the Sheriff and would not allow reductions in his department. The local District Manager for the electric company stood up on Mr. Sossamon's behalf.

Mr. Sossamon has not been involved in anything controversial and absolutely nothing in his conduct would concern a reasonable person. The people who sided with the Sheriff were the minority on the Council but it was well known that if they got their majority, they would let Mr. Sossamon go. They finally got the numbers to remove him and the whole County was shocked. The whole atmosphere has changed since Mr. Sossamon left.

Mr. Sossamon is one of the best Administrators Hernando County has ever had and Mr. Dukes would rehire Mr. Sossamon immediately. He will do a good job for whoever hires him and everyone will like him.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Articulate,
- Timely,
- Very intelligent,
- Great background in finance and knowledge,
- Great with personnel,
- Always courteous with others, and
- Makes others feel comfortable.

Strengths: Knowledge, background, finance, personnel, treats others nicely, nice person to work with, stands up for himself, disciplines staff in a way that is not belittling or embarrassing.

Weaknesses: Tells you exactly how things are which Mr. Dukes appreciated but some of the other Commissioners did not take it well.

Garth Coller – County Attorney, Hernando County, FL 352-428-7525

Mr. Coller has been the County Attorney for Hernando County since 2000. Mr. Coller is the in-house attorney as well as the prosecutor. Mr. Sossamon was hired as the Administrator. Mr. Coller has worked with 11 County Administrators who were either temporary or permanent. Mr. Sossamon is at the top of the list in terms of skill and ability.

When hiring personnel Mr. Sossamon rates in the mid to upper range. The Board has limited the resources and an Administrator cannot hire the best candidates without the resources to do so. Most of Mr. Sossamon’s hires were as expected considering the resources he had. His decisions were very good. He maintains an organization at a high level.

When working with the public Mr. Sossamon did extremely well. He was very charming and members in the community tried to get the votes to retain Mr. Sossamon, which reflects on how well the public viewed him.

Mr. Sossamon is one of the Administrators who are smart enough to let the Attorney know what they are going to do before they do it, rather than ask permission after. He realized which decisions needed legal input and did not waste Mr. Coller’s time unnecessarily. When the situation seemed risky Mr. Sossamon brought legal in.

Mr. Sossamon is primarily a leader and less of a manager. He is a good manager from behind the desk but he was a leader who made changes where he thought they were wise. In terms of business development, he emphasized the need to broaden the tax base. He warned

Leonard “Len” B. Sossamon

Commissioners that cutting budgets would hurt them in the long run, and it did but they blamed him for it.

Hernando County had a historically significant property on land owned by the state. Even with a zero budget he managed to put together a group of members of the public to take it over as a guild. They ran it on a shoestring and it is now generating revenue, mostly because of Mr. Sossamon. He has good financial skills.

Mr. Sossamon responds remarkably well to stress. He did not see the move to terminate his employment coming and he still handled it very well. He politely defended himself when nonfactual statements were made and was more gracious than most people would have been.

You cannot be a County Administrator without controversy, but nothing unusual happened. The most controversial item in Mr. Sossamon’s past was a political fight with a local power broker who spent a fortune trying to oust Mr. Sossamon. He put signs up with every election calling Mr. Sossamon a liar, which was not true but it took a toll on the Commissioners. The opposing party on the Commissioner managed to get the three votes needed to terminate Mr. Sossamon’s employment. It was very much a surprise and very hard for the County.

Even the Commissioners who voted to let him go gave him remarkably good evaluations in terms of his skillset and abilities. Residents want to be given everything they want and when the Administrator has to say no, they strongly hold it against them. Enough of these interactions over time will lead to the Administrator’s demise. Mr. Sossamon was the longest serving Administrator of Mr. Collier’s tenure. Very few lasted longer than three years and some not even two.

Mr. Collier volunteered to be a reference for Mr. Sossamon when he learned of the Board’s decision. He gladly speaks the truth on Mr. Sossamon’s behalf.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Calm,
- Thoughtful,
- Smart,
- Gracious,
- Good humored,
- Good personality, and
- Likeable man.

Reference Notes
Leonard “Len” B. Sossamon

Strengths: Very charming, very good with the public, good communicator, decisive, understands the professionalism the job needs, terrific with business development, charming. He was a favorite of the general public, and he communicates well with Commissioners and the public which is not always the same skill.

Weaknesses: Trusted people more than he should. Politicians can be remarkably good at misleading you to believing you are safe when you are not and Mr. Sossamon was caught up in that.

Tina Duenninger – Executive Office Manager, Hernando County, FL 352-346-4256

Ms. Duenninger met Mr. Sossamon in 2012. Mr. Sossamon is very detail oriented, very high energy, and a go getter. He is very intelligent. She has worked for Hernando County since 1999 and no other Administrator compares to him in terms of intellect and style.

They use a hiring panel of three people but Mr. Sossamon has the final say. He made good decisions both when hiring and in general. He is innovative. When he first came to the County, he restructured the organization to streamline processes and introduced a strategic plan which the County did not have. He measured the organization by the strategic plan and saw where the County was falling short.

Mr. Sossamon frequently spoke at homeowners’ associations, various community summits, and local Hernando County events. He is a very eloquent speaker and was in high demand. He kept everyone informed and was a leader who rallied employees around the strategic plan.

Hernando County has issues on a daily basis. Mr. Sossamon might be dealing with landfill issues, animal shelter issues, and personnel issues at the same time. Every day brought a multitude of issues which he was very adept in addressing.

Mr. Sossamon has good financial skills and is always responsive. His emails come in at all sorts of hours, late at night and early in the morning. He does not just work 8 to 5.

Hernando County always has controversy and is very political, which led to Mr. Sossamon’s departure but was not of his making. Nothing about his conduct or background would concern an employer.

During Ms. Duenninger’s tenure she witnessed employees when many Administrators left the organization but Mr. Sossamon’s departure was different because employees were crying actual tears. Not just regular staff members but department managers as well. His impact was significant.

Reference Notes
Leonard “Len” B. Sossamon

Ms. Duenninger would hire Mr. Sossamon. Hernando County has 857 employees and most of them would agree with the statements in this reference. Anyone would be crazy not to hire Mr. Sossamon, he is just really wonderful and they were sorry to see him leave.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Intelligent,
- Eloquent,
- Kind hearted,
- Go getter,
- Leader, and
- Planner – likes to plan ahead of time.

Strengths: Very calm in stressful situations, takes time to get the point across, very personable, treats the custodial staff the same as he treats elected officials.

Weaknesses: He does not like to say no and will take on more than he should have. He played the role of Economic Development Director as well as Administrator. Sometimes he should say no.

Pat Crowley – former President, Chamber of Commerce, Hernando County, FL 352-584-3351

Ms. Crowley has been the President of the Chamber of Commerce since 2000. She participated in one of the interview Committees when Mr. Sossamon was hired in Hernando County.

Mr. Sossamon’s strengths is very much in collaborative efforts and working with people. He is very community minded and had a presence in the community. The County has a population of 187k and they are a suburban rural area. A good percentage of their population is retirees. It is a very close knit community for leaders and business owners in the community. He was very active and present. He participated in community events and attended functions.

Managing a community of stoic people who do not want change is difficult. However, Mr. Sossamon is innovative and tried to move the County forward while maintaining a good balance between the residents who had lived there for a long time and the new, more transient, diversified population with different ideas. He is visionary.

The Chamber does not collaborate with the County on many items, but they meet now and again. They have a government affairs director who spent a great deal of time with the County Commissioners and also with Mr. Sossamon. He believes in collaborating and working together. He offers the olive branch to make it happen.

Reference Notes
Leonard “Len” B. Sossamon

The Chamber is a free standing entity with no funding through the City or County, they rely totally on their membership. They have a collaborative partnership with the Small Business Development Center (SBDC) at the University of South Florida in Tampa. They began to partner with the County to fund this program but had to negotiate whether the County would pay for it every year. Mr. Sossamon was supportive of the program because he realized that it was important for economic development. He included the program as part of the economic development program so the Chamber did not have to renegotiate County funding every year which was very appreciated.

Mr. Sossamon seems to have good financial skills, Ms. Crowley is not involved in the budget process enough to be certain. They only worked together on economic development, for which Mr. Sossamon had definite expertise and met deadlines. He always had a smile and his staff never said a negative word about how he managed them.

The Board was constantly changing and they terminated Mr. Sossamon’s contract. He knows how to work with a Board, but they had some challenges which were political in nature. Ms. Crowley is not aware of anything negative in Mr. Sossamon’s background and she never saw him do anything inappropriate.

Mr. Crowley would definitely consider hiring Mr. Sossamon in a different situation with a different Board. He did an exceptional job of moving the County forward. Their County is comprised primarily of lower income folks who do not want their taxes raised. He did a great job maintaining balance between these residents while still addressing the effects of the recession.

Words or phrases used to describe Len Sossamon:

- Dynamic,
- Positive,
- Outgoing,
- Collaborative,
- Strong leader,
- Fun, and
- Always has a smile.

Strengths: Very community minded, very much a collaborator, very outgoing personality, very positive person which is important in government, good listener, mediator who created a win/win for everyone.

Weaknesses: None identified.

Barbara Behrendt – Reporter, Hernando County, FL 352-848-1434

Ms. Behrendt covers County Government in Hernando County. She first met Mr. Sossamon when he applied to the position and made the finalist list.

Mr. Sossamon was always very truthful in their interactions. He had detractors and supporters, which is common for political figures. Hernando County is very political, and you cannot avoid running afoul of one side or another of the powers that be. The current Commission believes that Mr. Sossamon is terrible with money while others say that the Commission is responsible for deciding how the money is spent.

Mr. Sossamon’s decisions were good, he never made any decision that was in his own personal best interest. He was visible in the community and he got along with everyone. He is very personable but will not stop talking about BBQ when it is mentioned. Reporters in the area know not to bring it up in an interview or they never get back to the topic at hand.

While Mr. Sossamon never went out of his way to contact Ms. Behrendt, he was always very responsive to her and even gave her his cell phone number. If she sent him questions via email, even on items that most managers consider painful like looking at what the County accomplished in the past year, he was always gracious and made time for her.

When the Board let Mr. Sossamon go, he had plenty of ammunition he could have used against them. He was blunt and honest because he needed to be. When Ms. Behrendt interviewed him after the fact about his departure, he was honest but not spiteful. Mr. Sossamon’s job is controversial. The people against him believed he was a terrible economic development director, but the people who supported him listed all of his economic development achievements. In politics it is all about who has the majority vote, he had it for a long time and then he did not.

Administrators in Hernando County typically last about two years, but Mr. Sossamon did not get caught in that cycle because he can relate to others. Even people who had negative things to say about his work felt like he was a nice man. Mr. Sossamon survived a long time in a difficult political environment.

Ms. Crowley was uncomfortable providing phrases and adjectives as they are value judgments. In her role as a reporter she has to remain non biased.

Strengths: Always truthful and always fair.

Weaknesses: None identified.

We spoke with several responsible people in the community about the website, and its claims. Everyone stated emphatically that the website is false and without any validity.

They further indicated that the website was created to retaliate against Mr. Sossamon because he would not bend to pressure from special interests – specifically, influential, if not entirely above board, business people in the community.

Unfortunately, the site continues to live on and to damage Mr. Sossamon’s career opportunities.

Leonard “Len” Sossamon

Wayne Dukes – County Commissioner, Hernando County, FL 352-263-8353

The person who created the website, www.lennytheliar.com, is a businessman who is borderline crazy with a few screws loose. He tried to run over Mr. Sossamon and was not able to, so he created the website to discredit him. Everyone thought it was a joke because they knew the information in it had no validity.

Overall, the business community and the public loved Mr. Sossamon. He worked well with the Chamber and the public, and he is a great person. Hernando County does have an element, however, which wants to influence local government leaders, and they did not appreciate the fact that Mr. Sossamon would not bend to special interest groups.

Regarding Mr. Sossamon’s departure, a Commissioner was being appointed as Chairman who had never been Chairman before. Everyone knew that his sole purpose in wanting to be Chairman was to remove Mr. Sossamon as the administrator. This decision was absolutely personal and stemmed from businessmen in the community who feel that the staff works for them instead of for the Commission. Members of the public came to the meeting in large numbers to state that Mr. Sossamon's termination was a disservice to the County.

Anyone who hires Mr. Sossamon will be thrilled with his performance. He knows how to get things done. Hernando County went through five administrators in eight years. Mr. Sossamon was there from 2012 to 2019, which says much for his abilities. Anyone who hires Mr. Sossamon will not be disappointed.

Charles and Diane Greenwell – 502-939-9809

Mr. Greenwell is a prominent local attorney and he and his wife are knowledgeable members of the community. He was surprised to learn that the website still exists and considers it to be false. Hernando County in general, and particularly Hernando Beach, has a social media mob. Mr. Greenwell feels that Mr. Sossamon should hire someone to trace the website to its owner. As it has impacted Mr. Sossamon's employment opportunities, and the accusations on the website are not valid, he could have a substantial claim against the creator of the website.

While neither Mr. nor Mrs. Greenwell knows for certain who created the website, the rumor is that it was someone who was on an unpaid advisory committee that Mr. Sossamon discontinued. The disbanding of the committee led to hard feelings and one committee member went after Mr. Sossamon as a payback. This type of political retaliation is very characteristic of Hernando County right now and has occurred on many occasions.

The region has a network of people who try to control elections and the website about Mr. Sossamon seems to be directly tied to this network. Money flows to Hernando County from the south, and to the south from Hernando County. Mr. Greenwell ran for office and was told that if he wanted money from the south, he had to do certain things. He refused as that is not how he plays the game and lost the election.

Mr. Sossamon is a great administrator and a tremendous leader. The staff, without exception, was very supportive of Mr. Sossamon and was very sad when he left. Essentially, Mr. Sossamon was caught in the good ol' boy system and his departure was purely political. A political ambush was orchestrated and many knew about it but did not think the parties involved had enough votes to actually terminate Mr. Sossamon. The process was not well done, very unceremonious and an embarrassment to anyone involved in leadership in the County. Mr. Sossamon did a tremendous job in the County and was one of the longest lasting administrators the County has had. He had great ideas, worked well with others, and kept everyone informed. He was fair to everyone no matter their party affiliation. He was very transparent with the public.

Returning to Service - Former Palatka official tapped to be interim Crescent City manager
Author: Sarah Cavacini

CRESCENT CITY – The city commission’s first choice for interim city manager is a Putnam County native. During a special meeting Tuesday, former Palatka City Commissioner Phil Leary was chosen, but his start is contingent upon background and reference checks.

Although it is unclear which candidate each commissioner voted for, three voted for Leary and two voted for Former Hernando County Administrator Leonard Sossamon. Should Leary decline the offer or the background check not clear, Sossoman would be the next candidate for the job and have to go through the same process.

Ideally, the commission wants the interim city manager to begin April 1, and work with current City Manager Michael Esposito until his departure. Esposito will leave Crescent City on April 10 to take another city manager job in Clayton, Georgia. “We’re really looking for someone who can wear a lot of hats,” Commissioner Lisa DeVitto said. “... We’re in need of everything. You have to be a one-man band.” The interim city manager will be paid $7,000 a month without benefits and would be allowed to apply for the full-time city manager position.

Leary served as the state director of the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development from April 2019 through January 2021 after being appointed by President Donald Trump. Leary, who would commute from Palatka to Crescent City, said he would be interested in a long-term position but wants to see how the interim position goes before applying. “My first step would be to evaluate all the departments,” Leary said. “... (And), obviously, work with the transition from the city police department to the (Putnam County Sheriff’s Office) which, quite frankly, I thought was an outstanding move.”

Earlier this month, the Crescent City Commission voted for the sheriff’s office to take over for Crescent City Police Department as the city’s law enforcement agency. The top two interim applicants were chosen from a pool of four, including former DeFuniak Springs City Manager Mell Smigielski who interviewed via Zoom with a crying baby in hand and dog barking throughout parts of the interview.

Commissioners briefly discussed sending out the application for the permanent city manager position but said the interim city manager could finalize the details. However, they unanimously approved a starting salary of up to $85,000 for the permanent position.

Tuesday’s special called meeting came as City Attorney Jay Asbury announced his retirement earlier this year, Administrative Assistant Deborah Wazowicz plans to leave April 1 and Financial Director Debbi Peacock, who is still working, announced her retirement in December. “Commissioner (Harry) Banks and myself have been here a long time,” Commissioner Judith

Port Richey’s City Manager Search Finalized

Author: Eric Horchy

About five months after the familiar face of Vincent Lupo walked away from City Hall, Port Richey has selected its new, long-term city manager. Late last month, the City Council ended its search process by selecting Michael John Dudte over existing interim city manager Len Sossamon. Five candidates had been in the running, but three others removed their resumes from consideration. Dudte, currently the city administrator of Chapman, Kansas, comes to West Pasco after receiving a 3-2 vote from the board. Councilman Todd Maklary made the motion in favor of Dudte, Councilman Tom Kinsella seconded, and Mayor Scott Tremblay represented the swing vote.

The first motion, made by Councilman William Dittmer in favor of Sossamon, received a second from Councilwoman Jennie Sorrell but failed to receive any more supporting votes. Throughout the council’s roughly 50-minute discussion, all five board members expressed difficulty in coming to a decision between the two candidates. “I spent a lot of time with this issue because I think it’s probably one of the biggest issues we face as a city,” Tremblay said. “My humble opinion is this council could pick either one of the candidates and I think either one would move the city forward in a positive direction. I think both are well-qualified, and quite frankly, I like both of them.”

“No matter who is selected I think both should take our comments as not criticisms but constructive criticisms of what we saw and how they can improve themselves,” Maklary said. Dudte, 55, is native to Newton, Kansas, and the town he leaves governs about 1,400 residents. He’s been Chapman’s city administrator since May 2017 and previously served as a foreign service officer with the U.S. Department of State from July 2012 to May 2017.

Port Richey is more than twice the size of Chapman, with nearly 3,000 residents, but still falls in the small city category. The familiarity with small-town government was viewed by the council as a positive. “One of the things I really liked about him is that he runs a small city and the crux of that city is the same as our city,” Tremblay said. “They value the power company because that’s their lifeline, just like our water company. The biggest thing to the general public is to keep our taxes down and give us as much as we can get for our money. And he’s run a small city with 18 employees and some part-time help, so I really like that about him.”

Dudte’s desire to familiarize himself with all aspects of the city — from staff to business owners to residents — was praised by board members on multiple occasions. “That’s the one thing that really stuck with me about the whole evening speaking with him,” Dittmer said, referencing the interview process with Dudte. “His involvement within (Chapman) — getting to know the people, the businesses, the organizations, and being a part of it — is like taking ownership of that city,” Kinsella said. “I was very, very impressed with that.”

While the council eventually landed on Dudte to take over as city manager, Sossamon received plenty of praise for his job running Port Richey since Lupo retired in late June. When Sossamon was selected to replace Lupo on an interim basis, it was to be for no longer than six months — a deadline that comes near the end of December. Midway through the city manager search, which was assisted by executive search firm Colin Baenziger and Associates, council members requested Sossamon add his name to the list of candidates.

“We were having some hard times,” Dittmer said. “The way (Sossamon) jumped into the seat ... and it wasn’t words, it was actions. We saw stuff turning right away. That is what really impressed me with Len. He was hands-on, not sitting back, moving forward, and he didn’t act temporary in any way. He was going to move us to what our goals were in the city, whether he was going to be here for three months or long-term.” “To his credit, every citizen I’ve talked to says Mr. Sossamon is very available and makes himself available,” Kinsella said of the outgoing interim city manager’s relationship with the public.

A factor that tipped the decision in Dudte’s favor was the potential for a longer-term commitment. Council members expressed the opinion that Sossamon may only be willing to stay in the position for a small handful of years, whereas Dudte desires to be around for a longer period of time. “I think what the city needs is some fresh blood, someone from the outside coming in and taking a look at the city as a whole and giving us new direction, new ideas,” Kinsella said. “Not that Mr. Sossamon can’t do that, but I’m also concerned about how long he’s going to be here. Mr. Dudte indicated that he’s going to be here for quite a while.”

Although Sossamon’s only been involved with the city for five-plus months, he has a familiarity with the region after spending the previous six-plus years as Hernando County administrator. Going with an out-of-towner is a risk, Tremblay said, prior to voting for Dudte.

Port Richey Considers Property Tax Increase

Author: Barbara Behrendt

Property owners in Port Richey could see a significant increase in their city tax bill if the City Council gives its final approval during next Thursday’s final budget hearing. City officials have been talking about the need to replenish their reserves, which are monies not earmarked for specific expenses but are there for emergencies. Under the proposed budget brought to the council at their first budget hearing earlier this month, the city would end up with a $960,000 reserve. Officials said that should be closer to $1.6 million to meet the general mark for a reserve, but it was set to be just $150,000 before the proposed adjustments in the budget and tax rate.

The rate on the table, which got tentative approval from the council on Sept. 10, is a mill higher than the current tax rate. That amounts to $100 in additional city tax for the owner of a property with a taxable value of $100,000. The current rate is 5.7847 mills and it will go to 6.7847 mills — a 17.3 percent increase. The change would mean the owner of that same property would have a bill of $678.47 for city services. The tentative general fund budget is $6.75 million.

During earlier discussions, the council considered a 50 percent higher rate increase, but sent interim city manager Len Sossamon back to the drawing board to find cuts while also allowing Port Richey to give employees a two percent pay raise. City staff found $190,000 in cuts, including leaving a couple of positions open.

They brought back a pared-down spending plan which got to the council’s target. But one other change in the plan which raised some questions in the community concerned the city’s Community Redevelopment Agency. While the city was on track to contribute $967,000 to the agency, which focuses on projects to improve blighted areas in the city, this year Sossamon brought forward a recommendation to contribute just $31,646. That amount tracked a contribution percentage approved in a previous budget year.

Some in the community approached Sossamon and posted on social media that the decision could cost money that Pasco County also contributes to the Port Richey Community Redevelopment Agency. But Pasco officials said they have budgeted their contribution at $835,159. The budget changes were acceptable to council members, and Port Richey Mayor Scott Tremblay said the plan “leaves us very healthy all the way around.” The final hearing on the city budget is set for Thursday at 6:30 p.m.

Port Richey Picks Former Hernando Administrator as Temporary City Manager
City Council Members Chose Len Sossamon Citing His Familiarity with Florida Law and Extensive Background in Government.

Author: Barbara Behrendt

The Port Richey City Council has chosen Len Sossamon as interim city manager over three other candidates, noting he has considerable government management experience. Sossamon will serve for no more than six months as the city seeks a permanent manager to replace Vince Lupo. He announced his retirement last month amid a contentious debate over his decision to move police chief Gerard DeCanio into retirement sooner than he had wanted.

Lupo leaves at the end of the month. City officials wanted to get someone on board as soon as possible. At their regular council meeting last week they considered Sossamon and two other candidates who had been vetted by search firm Colin Baenziger and Associates, along with another candidate who submitted a resume.

Sossamon earned approval when council members noted he had been Hernando County administrator, knew Florida law, served for years as city manager in Concord, N.C., and had implemented Hernando's first master stormwater plan. Sossamon was Hernando administrator from 2012 through last year and also served as the county's economic development director.

Sossamon, 69, lost the Hernando job when the majority of the Hernando commission blamed him for ongoing budget shortfalls and poor management decisions. He will be paid $90 an hour, get a car allowance, a cell phone and a laptop. Sossamon will start before Lupo's last day to get briefings on city issues. One of his first jobs is to hire DeCanio's replacement. He said he had faith that the Florida Police Chiefs Association, which was chosen for the search, would bring forward good candidates. "It's exciting," Sossamon said in an interview. "I feel I can do a good job for them."

Residents hit with highest property tax increase in 30 years

Author: Barbara Behrendt

Hernando County's painful budget problems all boiled down to one page of numbers projected on the wall as commissioners tried to sort out what to do. For each year that county officials hadn't overspent, the numbers were lined with green. For each year they overspent, the numbers were lined with red. The abundance of red lines, the depleted reserve accounts and projections of the bank account running dry by Oct. 1 led commissioners to a difficult decision to resolve a general fund deficit of $11 million.

By a 3-2 vote, the commission agreed to raise the tax rate by a mill, which amounted to a dollar in taxes for every $1,000 in appraised taxable property value. The owner of a house with a taxable value of $100,000 would pay an additional $100 to support county services. Commissioners Steve Champion and Wayne Dukes voted against the increase. Not coincidentally, they were the same two commissioners who earlier in the year voted no on firing County Administrator Len Sossamon.

Commission Chairman Jeff Holcomb and commissioners John Allocco and John Mitten had voted to end Sossamon's contract. The majority said the administrator had failed to properly inform the commission of the pending financial disaster. Sossamon's finance director also had made several significant errors, which made the financial picture worse. Yet, for several years, Sossamon, county budget officials, the county finance director and the auditor each had issued warnings that none of the five commissioners heeded.

In 2019, at the request of the new county administrator, Jeff Rogers, the commission hired a financial consultant who allowed them to see what would happen under a myriad of budget scenarios. Whatever was done with taxes, the advisor said, the county must curb the rate at which its expenses grew.

Commissioners moved the county's information technology department budget to the Clerk of the Circuit Court, saving money in years to come. They also made other staffing cuts. And county officials vowed to scrutinize union contracts that increase the cost of government with built-in pay raises.

As the year wound down, the commission got a bit of good news. With fiscal help from several county departments and an early influx of property taxes, the general fund probably wouldn't have to borrow money from the utilities department to pay bills at the end of the year.

You Need ‘the Skin of an Alligator’: How Hernando County’s Warring Factions Sunk Another Administrator

Author: Barbara Behrendt

When Len Sossamon was fired as Hernando County administrator on Jan. 29, it was just as predicted when he took the job in 2012. Hernando County, he was told, devoured its administrators. The head-hunter advertising the position urged candidates to have "the skin of an alligator." Sossamon became the ninth administrator in 12 years. Sossamon's tenure depended on support from at least three of the five commissioners. And he had that support until last year, after a shift in control of the all-Republican board.

Commissioners Nick Nicholson, Steve Champion and Wayne Dukes formed a majority coalition that supported Sossamon. Then Nicholson was arrested in April on prostitution-related charges and suspended from office. Gov. Rick Scott replaced Nicholson in June with John Mitten, who sided with Commissioners John Allocco and Jeff Holcomb on a number of issues, including Sossamon's firing.

Over the years, commissioners have formed competing — and sometimes shifting — factions, whose votes have benefited businesses ranging from tourism development and land purchases to garbage hauling and airport operations. And business and political leaders have struck out behind the scenes at commissioners — and administrators — who don't behave as they wish.

In Sossamon's final moments on the job, members of the new majority criticized him for letting other commissioners run him in the past. There wasn't a single commissioner who didn't do that, Sossamon fired back. "I think I can safely say in front of God and everybody that the micromanaging potential and propensity of the boards I've had in this county has been greater than in any place I have served in 30 years, without a doubt," Sossamon said. "Nobody's shirt tails or cuffs of their britches are clean, bar none," he said. "I can say that unequivocally."

The way it was

For years, the commission majority supported Sossamon, and their supporters benefited. Dukes gave Sossamon perfect scores on his evaluations, and Nicholson's were largely positive. Both had connections to Tom Barnette, a local businessman who gave counsel and money to their campaigns. Barnette owns a travel agency and has ties to other enterprises that have done business with the county.

Barnette won a $50,000 contract for his "Follow the Mermaid" marketing campaign, which the county bought in 2014, but never used. He arranged a consulting agreement in 2016 with a company chosen to run a multi-million dollar, waste-to-energy effort that the county later dropped. And he was a consultant to Republic Services, which in 2017 won a seven-year, no-bid contract with the county for garbage service.

Leonard B. Sossamon
(Articles are in reverse chronological order)

Champion joined the majority coalition when he was elected in 2015. It was not so much that Champion was a Barnette man, but more that he wasn't a Kimbrough man. Champion said he ran to oppose what he called the good old boys in Brooksville, whom he blamed when SunTrust bank canceled accounts with his American Gun and Pawn business.

For years, the face of SunTrust in Hernando County has been bank executive Jim Kimbrough. The bank helped finance local business expansion, and Kimbrough worked behind the scenes to influence commissioners and administrators. As recently as last week's commission meeting, Champion said he was pleased to see SunTrust disappear from the local banking landscape after hearing about its recently-announced merger with BB&T.

The Champion-Dukes-Nicholson coalition was made clearer last year during the Hernando County Sheriff's Office investigation into charges against Nicholson. A witness close to Nicholson told investigators that she overheard Champion tell him that if Nicholson left the board, their three-person alliance would no longer be in charge. The three "are all on the same team together, and they can get whatever they want done, because they're the majority," the woman told detectives. Champion and Dukes cast the two lone votes against firing Sossamon.

The other camp

Commissioners Holcomb, Allocco and Mitten voted to fire Sossamon. Among the new majority's connections are ties to local Republican Party leaders and the Greater Hernando Chamber of Commerce. Holcomb leads the Hernando County Republican Party Executive Committee, a job he took over from Allocco, who took it over from state Rep. Blaise Ingoglia (R-Spring Hill). Until this year, Ingoglia was head of the state Republican Party.

Mitten chaired the Chamber's government affairs committee for years. And Chamber chairman Marilyn Pearson-Adams is head of Century 21 Alliance Realty, the same company at which Holcomb is a real estate agent.

Local Republican and business leaders have long said that Sossamon should not have been both county administrator and economic development director. Outwardly, they said that the economic development role was so important, there should be one person doing only that job. Anonymously, through pop-up social media sites, they criticized Sossamon specifically.

The idea of splitting the job surfaced again after Mitten joined the board last year and commissioners first discussed reopening Sossamon's contract. The Chamber reminded commissioners of its concerns in an email sent to all commissioners on the day of Sossamon's ouster. "... an individual dedicated solely to the mission of economic development is necessary to help achieve economic prosperity for businesses and residents of Hernando County," wrote Pat Crowley, chamber president.

One of the biggest prizes for commission factions has been helping their business interests at the Brooksville-Tampa Bay Regional Airport. It came down to a power struggle between Sossamon and Gary Schraut, a real estate broker, who also works with Chamber chairman Pearson-Adams.

Internet – Newspaper Archives Searches
Leonard B. Sossamon
(Articles are in reverse chronological order)

When Sossamon arrived in Hernando County, Schraut was chairman of the airport's Aviation Authority, a longstanding advisory board that the commission disbanded in 2014 after a series of controversies. On the day he was fired, Sossamon told commissioners this story: Shortly after he arrived, he said, Schraut asked him to sign some airport paperwork and reacted badly when Sossamon wanted to read it first. "The battleground of Hernando County is littered with people who tried to take me out," Sossamon said he was told by Schraut. "I thought to myself, I'm a southern boy, and I recognize a threat when I hear one."

Schraut told the Times this week that he never had that conversation with Sossamon, although he remembers telling him that he would be around long after Sossamon was gone. Schraut denied any power struggle over the airport — as Aviation Authority chairman, he said, the law was on his side. But he acknowledged that he and Sossamon were at odds.

Sossamon lied to him, Schraut said, and worked to secure business for Barnette. That's why Schraut said he helped to run a website called "Lenny the Liar" during the 2016 election season, blasting Sossamon and the commissioners who supported him. Schraut has been closely aligned with Kimbrough. In 2013, Kimbrough and Schraut were outed for holding secret meetings with commissioners about the airport, perpetuating the sense that the airport was a closed shop and only certain individuals got business there. Kimbrough publicly supported the Schraut-led Aviation Authority, and his bank funded economic development projects at the airport.

In 2016, Schraut supported Kimbrough and Cliff Manuel of Coastal Engineering, when they made a run at the county waste-to-energy contract — challenging the company connected to Barnette. Also during the run-up to the 2016 election, Ingoglia admitted this week, he was an investor in the now-defunct Florida News Flash, a blog that also posted negative stories about the commissioners who supported Sossamon. Ingoglia said he had no editorial control over the site, even though he was a site administrator.

Ingoglia said he does not discuss local politics with commissioners and has no alliance with Holcomb or Allocco. He said he did not think Sossamon was doing a good job but was not behind his ouster. "I thought he was a poor administrator," Ingoglia said. "He took on too much and played too many political games."

Sossamon told the Times last week that he tried to talk to all sides during his tenure, even Kimbrough and Schraut. That probably extended his longevity, he said. But he also was realistic. "You can please some of the people, but you can never please all of the people," Sossamon said. "Sooner or later, it comes back to bite you. And it did."

The new reality

Holcomb had been in the minority coalition since he was elected to the commission in 2014. But his fortunes began rising last year as he became part of the new majority. In December, Holcomb was named head of the county Republican Party. Days later, he was nominated to be commission chairman — over vice-chairman John Allocco.

Leonard B. Sossamon
(Articles are in reverse chronological order)

Sossamon's biggest cheerleader on the board, Dukes, blasted giving Holcomb the chairmanship. "He hasn't shown that he has a working relationship with our administrator," Dukes said. "Matter of fact, the rumor is that he'd like to fire him today." In fact, Holcomb gave Sossamon his most critical evaluations over the years and spoke out about his contract extension in 2016. Dukes was outvoted, however, and Holcomb took the gavel.

On Jan. 29, Holcomb — not known to spearhead issues at commission meetings — passed his gavel to Mitten so he could make a motion himself. Holcomb gave a detailed statement about why Sossamon needed to go and moved for his termination.

Dukes spoke out again. Dukes said he had missed a recent meeting of the local Republican Executive Committee. But he had heard that during the meeting, Ingoglia's father, Andrew Ingoglia, asked Holcomb when he was going to fire Sossamon. "Folks, there's something wrong with this," Dukes said. "It smells." Holcomb said he responded at the committee meeting that he had placed an item about Sossamon's contract on the upcoming commission agenda.

Blaise Ingoglia's legislative assistant, Ashley Hofecker — who is not a regular at commission meetings — sat through the meeting on Jan. 29, occasionally typing on her cell phone. The Times requested any government business-related texts received by commissioners that day on their county or private cell phones. They are public under the Florida Government in the Sunshine Law. Four commissioners responded immediately. Mitten produced a text from Manuel, saying that with Sossamon gone, they should talk about deputy administrator Jeff Rogers. Three others said they had no government-related text messages on their private phones. Holcomb didn't respond.

A week later, when called specifically about the texts, Holcomb said he had no government-related texts. "I had no marching orders from Blaise Ingoglia. He's too busy," Holcomb said. "People just want to have an enemy they can point to." Ingoglia said it was Hofecker's job to monitor local government, and that's why she was at the meeting.

At the Jan. 29 meeting, Allocco and Mitten shared Holcomb's concerns about Sossamon, citing budgeting errors and poor employee management decisions. Those problems have the county spending more than $9 million more in its general fund this year than it is collecting in revenue. Allocco said this week that he arrived at his decision on Sossamon independently. But the question of who was responsible for the county's budget and personnel problems — Sossamon or the commissioners he worked for — remains.

Since the majority coalition of the commission flipped, Schraut has started to attend commission meetings again after being away for years. And a new airport advisory committee has formed. Two properties that Schraut represents, and stands to receive a commission from selling, secured county contracts at the same meeting in which Sossamon was fired. Manuel challenged a recent bid for airport engineering work after Coastal Engineering wasn't recommended by the county staff. The matter is slated for discussion at Tuesday's commission meeting.

Several days after his termination, Sossamon said he is proud of his business development accomplishments, the county's strategic plan and its master storm water plan. "My conscience is clear," Sossamon said. "I did a good job for the county." He hopes the "revolving door" of administrators doesn't happen again, saying it does not serve the county.

Sossamon, 68, said he is looking at several possible employment opportunities. He earned an annual salary and benefit package worth just over $295,000 for his dual position and will receive a parting package worth $76,089 in severance and $61,386 in paid leave time.

County Official's Score Drops

Author: Barbara Behrendt

In the midst of Hernando County's budget shortfall, the county commission's evaluation score this year for county administrator Len Sossamon is the lowest since he arrived in 2012. However, as in past years, Sossamon has both fans and critics on the board. The multi-million-dollar shortfall is the definitive issue in ratings by commissioners Jeff Holcomb and John Allocco, who marked Sossamon "unsatisfactory" in financial management. Commission Chairman Steve Champion marked him "marginal, needs improvement," in that category.

Commissioner Wayne Dukes marked Sossamon as "excellent/proficient" in each of the 15 qualities measured, as he has in past years. Sossamon's average score this year was 4.2, with Dukes giving him a 5.0, the highest possible, and Holcomb giving the lowest score, 2.93. The five-point scale places Sossamon's average just above the category of "exceeding expectations" overall.

The rating system includes marks for everything from job knowledge and ethics to organizational skills and humor. Holcomb noted that Sossamon's "hiring of a budget director created a budget crisis for the 2019 budget." He gave Sossamon lower marks on communicating with the governing body, and being honest and fair. For Holcomb, the administrator exceeded expectations in only three areas: creativity, adaptability and resilience.

Allocco also graded Sossamon as needing improvement in honesty and fairness, and in planning. Allocco said he trusted the accuracy of budget information given out last year, his first year on the commission, and was not aware until recently of the budget problems. "I feel that Len was either unaware of the poor financial position ... or was unwilling to communicate this openly with the commissioners in the sunshine during last year's budget workshops and meetings," Allocco wrote. "I depend upon him to speak honestly during our meetings to make sure we all have the whole story, even at the risk of hurt feelings."

Allocco also suggested goals that Sossamon make hiring and firing decisions based on the needs of the county rather than lobbying from individual commissioners, and that he give commissioners "the whole story," especially about budget issues. Champion praised Sossamon for picking a strong deputy county administrator in Jeff Rogers as part of his succession plan, for his experience in leadership and his ability to forge compromises between commissioners.

But Champion also urged Sossamon to be sure that information he provides commissioners and the public is accurate. His goal for the administrator was for him to fix the budget without raising taxes and to find a compromise with the budgets of constitutional officers. Dukes' perfect score for Sossamon praised his "strong leadership ability" and "sound judgment decisions." For goals, he stated: "Continue to strive to help local businesses to expand, continue reaching out to bring new businesses to Hernando County."

Sossamon, whose pay and benefits total $295,684, also is the county's economic development director. Sossamon, 67, came to the county in 2012 from North Carolina, making him one of the longest-serving Hernando County administrators in recent history. He did not do a self-evaluation this year, but said he understood the commissioners' concerns about the budget gap. Sossamon said he presented commissioners options that included reduced spending and raising revenue, but commissioners have held fast to not raising taxes. Sossamon said he was confident that county staff and commissioners will resolve this year's budget shortfall. The budget comes up for final approval in September.

Sossamon to Continue with Dual Roles

Author: Barbara Behrendt

Len Sossamon will be keeping his dual jobs of county administrator and economic development director for at least a while longer. County commissioners this week rejected the idea of spending $23,000 to conduct a nationwide search to find a new economic development director, which would allow Sossamon to focus on his administrator chores, and also opted to not spend $25,500 on a similar search for a new deputy administrator.

While the need for more focus on economic development was a primary plank in the campaign platforms of County Commission candidates last year, the board couldn't muster enough support to bring in a full-time director at the present time. Concerns that the 2017-18 budget is still top-heavy with expenses, and disagreement about which of the potential new jobs might be needed and how Sossamon is performing in the dual roles, the commission opted for a cheaper alternative for now.

Commissioners voted to advertise the job of deputy administrator - a job that would replace several assistant administrator positions now held by department heads - but to do so only internally, taking applications from employees in departments controlled by the commission and as well as from those employed by the county's constitutional officers. The job posting is expected to go up immediately.

The cost of filling that job, clerical support and space and equipment is estimated at $200,000. A small amount of that might be recovered if those in the current assistant administrator jobs take pay cuts, but that has not yet been determined, according to Cristi Charlow, the county's personnel and risk manager. Commission Chairman Wayne Dukes said he was concerned about spending money for nationwide searches, especially since the commission is in the middle of setting its budget for the 2017-18 fiscal year. "I don't want to be writing any checks I cannot cash," Dukes said.

Commissioner Nick Nicholson wanted to see how much Sossamon's load would be reduced with a deputy administrator added. He suggested the commission wait for several months after that person is on board to assess how things are going. "I think we have some talent internally" for the deputy administrator job, said Commissioner Steve Champion. He was also concerned about the cost of the search, which was to have been done by the same search firm that found Sossamon five years ago.

But Commissioner John Allocco strongly supported finding a new economic development director. He said Sossamon's annual evaluations have been largely positive over the last couple of years, indicating that he wasn't having trouble managing the administrator part of the job. "If these are accurate, then why does he need help?" Allocco said.

The previous commission began the process of seeking a full-time economic development director before the new commission was seated in January, so "hiring an economic development director should not seem unreasonable" at this point, he said. Asking Sossamon to do two full-time jobs was doing him a disservice, said Commissioner John Mitten. He said he saw the decision to hire a new deputy administrator or a new economic development director as an "either-or" proposition, but also noted that the county needs to focus on economic development full time as the county grows.

Dukes reminded the board that a search a few years ago for a new economic development director didn't turn up a suitable candidate, so the board turned to Sossamon, who had economic development experience in his past jobs. Dukes praised his work and asked him if he is currently working with new business prospects.

Sossamon detailed a variety of upcoming meetings with potential new businesses, noting there are between 16 and 18 he is currently courting. Dukes and Sossamon have also encouraged the board to find a way to beef up the county's war chest of potential financial enticements for new businesses, a kitty that sits just below $1 million currently. Other places have much bigger incentives to offer, they argue, including Pasco County, with a $50 million fund available.

Champion said there is a financial benefit to both the economic development and deputy administrator positions. He took note of several controversial issues that are costing the county money and said he wants to see a deputy who is "like a bulldog, somebody in charge." He said he was concerned that there are special interests trying to influence the hiring of an economic development director and that names of potential candidates are already being circulated. "I don't like that," Champion said. Commissioners voted to move forward with the internal search for the deputy administrator, with Allocco casting the sole no vote.

County Board Extends Sossamon's Contract

Author: Barbara Behrendt

As one of their last official acts, the Hernando County Commission this week awarded Len Sossamon a four-year contract extension as county administrator and economic development director - much to the chagrin of government watchdogs and the two incoming commissioners. The unanimous action likely means Sossamon is safe in his current jobs until Commissioner Jeff Holcomb, who has been gone on military leave for the last several months, returns. It is unclear when that will happen.

Two sitting commissioners, Wayne Dukes and Nick Nicholson, strongly support Sossamon, while the two commissioners who will be sworn in Dec. 6, John Allocco and Steve Champion, have raised questions about Sossamon's future in one or both of those jobs. Without a fifth commissioner to break a tie vote, nothing can be done to change Tuesday's action.

Critics, including Allocco and Champion, urged the old commission to leave the decision up to the new board. But Dukes argued that, with 30 years of commission experience among them, members of the old board "are more qualified than anybody" to decide on Sossamon's performance and better suited than "the guys with no experience."

Nicholson sang Sossamon's praises, saying that the administrator has worked with every commissioner and has made government more efficient and responsive. He said none of the county's other recent administrators' performances "could hold a candle" to Sossamon's. He also took the opportunity to urge the new commissioners to represent the public in every decision and not the "special interests." Nicholson noted, "we don't need anyone who pulls our strings or is telling us how to vote." Nicholson said that, when he ran afoul of powerful community leaders, he was told to drop out of the commission race or he would see his family and his business destroyed.

"What we need is a School Board, a City Council and a County Commission in which all the representatives are voting their conscience and not based on what someone is telling them to do," he said, contending that Sossamon has brought in 10 times as many jobs to the community as his predecessor, who earned $100,000 just for his economic development work. "Anyone who wants to do away with (Sossamon's economic development record) - I'm not so sure he should be sitting up here," Nicholson said.

Sossamon, who makes $168,750 a year performing both jobs, was the target of much of the election rhetoric aimed at replacing Nicholson and Commissioner Diane Rowden. Nicholson won re-election; Rowden was defeated. The commission's action on Tuesday does not actually tie the commission to anything. The extension of the contract calls for the same salary provisions and includes the same ability to remove Sossamon from the job. He would have received the same 20-week severance package if his contract was not extended past its previous May 2017 end date, county legal staff told commissioners. The decision, argued county resident Pat Miketinac, "should be up to the new commission."

Chuck Greenwell, who heads the government affairs committee of Hernando Beach Property Owners Association, had another perspective. He praised Sossamon's work, saying he was "one of the hardest-working people I have had ever seen in government." He called Sossamon "the glue, the continuity that holds the commission together" and said the county would be hard-pressed to find any replacement who could do better.

Allocco, who has been critical of Sossamon, urged the administrator himself to stop the commissioners from moving ahead on his contract, but County Attorney Garth Collier explained that Sossamon had no authority to do so. Pulling an advertised item from the agenda required either the chairman or a vote of the majority of the commission, Collier explained.

Election Season Online Attacks Target Sossamon

Author: Barbara Behrendt

During election season, incumbent candidates for public office expect to get blasted for their voting records and for pet issues. But in this year's Hernando County Commission races, some of the harshest attacks have been focused on County Administrator Len Sossamon, who doubles as the county's economic development director. The latest attack raised the hackles of commission Chairman Jim Adkins, who during this week's commission meeting complained about incorrect information circulating on social media. Sossamon read a memo he wrote to the commission, correcting the record on a particularly nasty attack on the Facebook page of Frank Rossetti, the CEO of a financial group that serves school district employees.

Rossetti, who was briefly a candidate for the School Board, posted an article about a Connecticut gun manufacturer that was trying to relocate and chose Texas over Hernando County. "I am sure that if we had the right people orchestrating this deal, it would be a win-win for everyone," Rossetti wrote. "There is no reason to lose companies like this to Texas or any other state for that matter, I mean if it's about jobs then let's bring jobs here."

Others chimed in, implying that getting such jobs might require bribing local officials. Local Realtor and political player Gary Schraut - who has long been critical of Sossamon's handling of airport and economic development issues - wrote: "We tried going after these companies 2 years ago. Sossamon screwed it all up." He stated that in order to land companies, Sossamon's "buddies" would all need to be paid.

Also jumping into the Facebook discussion was Jimmy Lodato, the Democrat hoping to win the District 1 seat on the commission. He is also a personal friend of the owners of the gun company. "Gary, I gave this to Mike McHugh (the previous economic development manager) and the commissioners never backed him up," Lodato wrote. "Alan Mossberg (an executive with the gun company) was my neighbor and my good friend in Tierra Verde. Three years ago, I asked Mike McHugh to contact my friend Iver Mossberg about moving here and he did, but the county never followed through after he left. Sadly, another missed opportunity."

Lodato's Facebook page is loaded with videos critical of the county's economic development efforts. "Some of the allegations in the Facebook stream are personal and are, in fact, totally untrue," Sossamon said. "I am accused of doing nothing to attempt to recruit, not only Mossberg, but other firearms manufacturers as well. The (County Commission) is accused of not backing ... McHugh. In general, our business/economic development efforts are critiqued as useless."

He said the county did follow up with the Mossberg family, but they never responded. In fact, Sossamon said, he wrote more than 360 letters to firearms manufacturers, and that began even before he officially became the county's economic development director. "We did not drop the ball on Mossberg or the others," Sossamon said. He noted that he wondered if the Facebook critics realized that the company moved its business to a subsidiary in Texas that has been in business for more than 25 years.

The Facebook commenters joining the criticism of the current commission include Jeff Holcomb, the county commissioner who is now on military leave. In the middle of a discussion about noon July 21, a commenter notes that the current commissioners need to be replaced - all but Holcomb. Holcomb responded at 3:35 p.m. that day: "Thank you gentlemen, if we get the right folks elected in November we can make some changes!" Commissioner Wayne Dukes said he appreciated that the county staff responded but noted that the people who are engaged in such discussions don't care about the facts. "It's personal attacks for personal gain," Dukes said.

When former planning commissioner and oft time County Commission critic Anthony Palmieri brought up recent accusations by a local conservative blogger that the commission and Sossamon were covering up for an airport business that was not meeting its contract obligations, Dukes said, "Consider the source." The blog, Florida News Flash, has been criticized by the commission before, with Sossamon calling out the accuracy of blogger Samuel Martin McCall and taking note of McCall's felony conviction for grand theft in Alabama.

Palmieri insisted that, if the company in question, Transformation Aviation Services, hasn't met a requirement to hire a certain number of people by this month's deadline, that information should be made public or it would seem like a coverup. County Attorney Garth Collier said that, if a company doesn't meet its contract requirements, there would be sanctions. As for whether those would be announced at a public meeting, he noted that the county is trying to attract business to Hernando, not turn it away. At the last commission meeting, Transformation Aviation Services owner David Tidwell, said publicly that his contract obligations for hiring employees had been met.

Hernando Administrator Receives Good Evaluations from all but One Commissioner
Author: Barbara Behrendt

Because of a mediocre score from the newest county commissioner, Jeff Holcomb, County Administrator Len Sossamon saw the average score drop in his annual evaluation for the first time this year. Sossamon will celebrate his fourth anniversary as administrator next month, a rare feat in a job that has long been like a rapidly revolving door. Commissioners evaluate administrators annually in 15 categories, ranging from resilience and adaptability to organizational skills and ethics. The scoring scale ranges from a 1, which indicates an unsatisfactory performance in a category, to a 5 which indicates excellence and proficiency.

In evaluations released late last month, Sossamon earned an average of 4.49 compared to last year's average of 4.64. Two commissioners, Wayne Dukes and Diane Rowden, gave Sossamon perfect scores of all 5s. Rowden praised Sossamon saying that his "organizational skills and motivational skills are incredible" and that he "has improved so many areas and continues to improve. He is always several steps ahead of the curve."

In November, Rowden raised the issue of highlighting the good work that Sossamon has done when he was wearing his other hat as the head of economic development for Hernando County. Rumors have been flying that Sossamon has a target on his back and that the upcoming November election could turn the tide for Sossamon's future. Among the powerful business leaders who Sossamon has crossed is Realtor Gary Schraut, who strongly opposed the County Commission's move to abolish the county's aviation authority on which Schraut had served for years. He has posted negative public comments on his Facebook page about Sossamon and his abilities. Dukes also expressed support for Sossamon at the meeting last year, as did Commissioner Nick Nicholson. Nicholson, who gave Sossamon a score of 4.93, and Rowden are both up for re-election this year.

On his evaluation, Nicholson said that the administrator "reorganizes positions to best use each person's strengths" and that he is "not afraid to change people around if he needs to." As a goal he has for Sossamon, Nicholson wrote "keep delegating but also follow up to see if people are doing their job and following the board's direction and his." Commission Chairman Jim Adkins, who is not seeking re-election, gave Sossamon a 4.53. He praised the administrator for his economic development efforts and credited him with creating jobs. "Keep working to get more good businesses in the county," he wrote. Holcomb did not write any comments about Sossamon's performance, but he gave him an average score of 3 which means "meets expectations." In the detail of the ratings, he marked Sossamon's "financial management" at a 2, which is "marginal, needs improvement," and his "job knowledge" as a 4 or "exceeds expectations." Sossamon signed all of the evaluations except for Holcomb's.

Commissioners Back Sossamon

Author: Barbara Behrendt

At a meeting late last month, the county's economic development supervisor, Valerie Pianta, touted new projects that have brought in hundreds of jobs and filled several vacant industrial sites. People need to pay attention, said County Commissioner Diane Rowden, because the rumor mill has been churning with stories that Pianta's boss, County Administrator Len Sossamon, has a target on his back. "To me, it's very disheartening to hear the rumblings of a concerted effort to get rid of Mr. Sossamon," Rowden said. "People need to recognize what's being done with Hernando County and the airport...with millions of dollars we've received through grants."

Sossamon, who also serves as the county's economic development director, added that in the last two months, Brooksville-Tampa Bay Regional Airport has received more than $2 million in grants for projects including the replacement of antiquated lighting, a new instrument landing system and replacing signs. More grant funds are expected soon to replace hangars. Rowden said she had heard some people in the community complain that Sossamon has accomplished nothing, but "they need to look at the numbers."

Commissioner Wayne Dukes also praised the economic development efforts, as did commission Chairman Nick Nicholson, who said of Sossamon, "I think he's doing a great job." Commissioner Jim Adkins spoke about the need to fast track more speculative buildings so the county will be ready to offer locations as businesses considered a move or expansion. One place where Sossamon's activities have been questioned is on the Facebook page of politically influential Realtor Gary Schraut. He has had a prickly relationship with Sossamon over airport issues since Schraut's chairmanship of the Aviation Authority, which the commission abolished last year. On his Facebook page, Schraut paints Sossamon, Dukes, Nicholson and Rowden all with the brush of tax-and-spend Democrats. Only Rowden is a Democrat. Schraut also complained about the void of county business successes. "We have an administrator/economic development director along with a trio of commissioners who just keep trying to buy their way into a successful business by wasting tax payers $'s! All these tax payer $'s are be wasted so they can claim they are business friendly...more like business inept," he wrote on the site Oct. 19.

Schraut also railed against Sossamon's bankruptcy in a private-sector venture several years ago. "Very little successful private sector experience on the BOCC. They abolished the Aviation Authority so we would not stand in the way of County Administrator 'Mr Bankruptcy' Len Sossamon," he wrote Oct. 19. "Yes, he had one serious venture outside of government and filed bankruptcy without his 50/50 partners consent!!! But he sure has pulled the wool over this community with the help of the BOCC, they know all about it!!" Schraut said he has since softened his feelings toward Sossamon because he believes he is only trying to please three members of his board. But he also said he strongly believes the job of county administrator needs to be separate from the job of economic development director. And he has little good to say about Sossamon in either role. Sossamon said people need only look at his record to know he is doing his job. "The proof is in the pudding," he said.

Leonard B. Sossamon
(Articles are in reverse chronological order)

That includes the projects Pianta presented at the meeting. Her report touted seven projects in the last year adding or absorbing 230,000 square feet, creating 230 new jobs and retaining 101 jobs. Also announced was a new company that has moved into and is fixing up the old Christian Contractors building on U.S. 41, according to Pianta. That 170,000-square-foot building will soon house Regency Technologies/Florida Metals Processing, a metal recycler. The company plans to hire 70 people. Pianta promised more good things ahead as the county is working with 14 other companies.

Sossamon, in a later interview, also talked about improvements in other county departments. "Apparently, somewhere along the way, I stepped on someone's toes," he said. Then, Sossamon remembered when he first came to Hernando County 3 1/2 years ago, he suspected within the first 48 hours he would meet the person who would ultimately be his undoing. "If I get fired, I'll do something else," he said. He said some people in the county's power structure want him out because he uses his experience to make his decisions. "I don't like to be handled," Sossamon said. "I know how to run a county."

Nicholson said he stands behind Sossamon and that he is the best administrator the county has had in recent memory. He said Sossamon has put good people in leadership positions, increased employee morale, gotten union contracts settled quickly, sped up permitting and demolished unsafe buildings. "The fact is that people are telling me to get rid of Leonard because he is in their way," Nicholson said. "They need to get three votes on the County Commission, and they don't have that now. It's just that simple."

Commission Gives Administrator High Marks

Author: Barbara Behrendt

The more the Hernando County Commission knows their administrator Len Sossamon, the more they seem to like him. As he hits his third anniversary in the job - a rare feat in the many years of high turnover in the county's top job - Sossamon has earned the highest marks he has received since arriving in Brooksville. The average score he earned when graded by the five commissioners late last month was 4.64 out of a possible five points. That's up from last year's 4.43 and his first year's score of 4.09. A 4 represents that Sossamon "exceeds expectations" while a 5 is excellent/proficient.

Two of the commissioners, Wayne Dukes and Diane Rowden, gave Sossamon 5's in all 15 categories, from planning and organization to honesty and creativity. His lowest score came from Jim Adkins who gave him all 4's. Dukes told him to "keep up the good work" and listed his strengths as providing strong leadership and being a team builder. Rowden gave him credit for "phenomenal" organizational and managerial skills and noted "his whole approach is proactive that goes hand in hand with his vision where Hernando County needs to be in 10-20 years." She also suggested that the county needs a more defined business development plan. "We need to pay Mr. Sossamon a significant increase for doing two jobs with excellent performance," she said.

Sossamon, who is also the county's economic development director, receives an annual salary of $168,750. Commission Chairman Nick Nicholson praised Sossamon for his problem solving and gave him a goal to fix the county's fleet and maintenance department. Adkins noted Sossamon "works very hard to expand economy in Hernando and expanding the workforce."

Heading into 2015, Hernando Administrator Has a lot of Prospects, Projects on His Plate
Author: Barbara Behrendt

For Len Sossamon, the pace each day is a sprint. That's because Sossamon is wearing two very demanding hats — one as county administrator and the other as Hernando's economic development director. When he takes a breather to think about what's in store for the county in 2015, as he did recently with the Times, it is no surprise that he has not just one, but two lengthy lists of tasks. Sossamon's first list reflects his favorite duties. "Recruit jobs. Recruit jobs. Recruit jobs," he said, noting that he and the county's economic development supervisor, Valerie Pianta, are currently working with 20 to 24 active prospects for new or expanding businesses, in addition to following up on leads from a number of organizations.

On the list of active prospects is a craft beer manufacturer. But Sossamon knows that the company is weighing its options, and Hernando County's competition is Asheville, N.C., a community that has some features going for it that Hernando doesn't. One of those is a technical school that offers a certification and degree program for brewing craft beer. That is why Sossamon is always exploring ways to make the incentive packages for businesses interested in Hernando County as attractive as possible. Other types of businesses on the active prospect list include high-technology companies and various research and development shops, as well as manufacturers of such products as cosmetics, pharmaceuticals and prosthetics. "We've made them proposals, and they just have to say yes," Sossamon said.

In addition to traditional economic development activities, he is continuing to look for a tourism venue for Hernando County. As the county has worked through finding a home for the proposed Nature Coast Education and Tourism Center, all eyes have been on that project to fulfill the need. It might, Sossamon said. But there might be something else in the works, as well. The County Commission has settled on a site in the Weekiwachee Preserve for the education center, but is awaiting input from the Southwest Florida Water Management District, which owns the site, before starting the design work. Sossamon said he hopes to get an extension from the state for spending the $3 million in state dollars that will help fund the project, which he anticipates could be completed within 18 months. Other ideas for the tourism venue are also in discussion, including working toward some traditional ecotourism options, as well some more active rather than passive types of tourist activities. Another possibility is the development of a sports complex.

In the new year, the county will continue to participate in the multicounty German manufacturing apprenticeship program that is set to be headquartered at Brooksville-Tampa Bay Regional Airport and Technology Center. That could be open by March, Sossamon said, and classes for adults could begin by May or June, and by the start of the school year for younger students. Work also continues with the school district and airport interests on developing an aviation academy. Micro Matic USA, which makes beer-dispensing equipment, has broken ground on its new 73,000-square-foot home, visible from the Suncoast Parkway. A ribbon could be cut for that facility by late June. Sossamon said multiple county departments have come together to make that project happen as smoothly and efficiently as possible. Another major push in 2015 will be to finalize the list of projects the county hopes to have funded through the Restore Act, which is the oil spill settlement fund from BP. The county has a list of projects, but has also solicited ideas from outside groups and individuals.

Development of a snorkel trail along a portion of the Hernando County coast might be one of the projects. Another possibility is identifying the worst infestations of invasive plants along the coast and starting to get them under control. As part of that discussion, Sossamon said, he also would like to update the county's ordinance on Brazilian peppers to include other plant invaders. "It's on the coast. It protects the environment. It's enhancing the environment," Sossamon said. Those are among the criteria that projects must meet to qualify for Restore Act funds.

Other top projects on the list for the coming year include taking a look at the companies ranked by county commissioners that provide nonlandfill alternatives for getting rid of solid waste, storm water-control projects and the continuation of lime rock road paving projects. Sossamon said he is looking forward to continuing the effort to diversify the county's tax base and to the impact that the opening of the new Cortez Commons shopping center and other new commercial buildings will have on the local economy in the coming months. "2014 was a good year," he said, "but I think 2015 will be even better."

Airport Lease Dispute Lands in Court

Author: Barbara Behrendt

For several months last year, controversy swirled around the efforts of a Clearwater-based airplane maintenance company to move to Brooksville-Tampa Bay Regional Airport and expand its operation. The debate sparked a power struggle between Hernando County Administrator Len Sossamon, and the leadership of the airport and the Hernando County Aviation Authority. The divisive issues ranged from the financial capabilities of the company, Corporate Jet Solutions, to a debate over whether the county was responsible for repairing its flawed building and site as a condition of the lease that the company ultimately signed in July 2013.

At the time, county officials agreed to fix some of the problems at the site, which previously had been known as the Brooksville Air Center. But since Corporate Jet Solutions owner Tony Dye and his father, Bradley, moved in, a host of new problems have arisen. Last week, the ongoing dispute about who is responsible for fixing what led the Dyes to seek an injunction in Circuit Court to prevent eviction from the site. A day later, the county filed paperwork in court seeking to evict the company. On Friday, Circuit Judge Donald Scaglione denied the injunction sought by Corporate Jet Solutions and canceled a hearing scheduled on the issue, making it possible for the company to make its arguments about the county's responsibilities for the flawed facilities through the county's eviction lawsuit.

The paper trail of legal action reveals that Corporate Jet Solutions officials have discovered several serious problems with their site, including substandard wiring, buildings not grounded to minimize danger from lightning, a fuel tank that doesn't measure up to the county's airport standards and a hangar with a smaller entry door than the one described in the county's advertisement seeking someone to lease the site. The wiring and grounding problems were discovered in October when a lightning strike immobilized the company's electric gate, telephone system and other electronics. "Defendant Hernando County performed the inspection necessary to obtain certificates of occupancy for the FBO (fixed-base operator) and the hangar," according to the Corporate Jet Solutions filing. "Therefore, defendant Hernando County knew or should have known about the faulty cabling, poor grounding and other latent defects at the property." The filing states that the county "willingly and knowingly permitted unlicensed, uninsured or unqualified lay persons to perform construction and electrical work," and the result created conditions that Corporate Jet Solutions officials were not aware of at the time they signed the lease.

On Oct. 7, County Commission Chairman Wayne Dukes visited Corporate Jet Solutions, and, according to court papers, Bradley Dye believed that Dukes intended for the more than $30,000 it will cost the county to replace the undersized fuel tank to be deducted from the company's lease payments. "As to the damages of the lightning strike, the estimate cost to repair the county's telephone system and other service equipment and to correct the defective grounding exceeds an additional $30,000," according to the court papers. The representative of Corporate Jet Solutions also notes that, "as a showing of good faith and to refute any allegations that this petition for injunctive relief is being used as a tactic to delay the payment of rent," the company has put $32,864.16 in escrow.

In an email written to his son and a representative of his lawyer, Bradley Dye characterizes his meeting with Dukes by saying, "I am convinced that Mr. Dukes was truly sincere and was frustrated to find that these problems have lingered since our leases were signed in July 2013. Mr. Dukes assured me that all of these issues would be completed by Nov. 4, 2014. ... "He was appreciative that the matters were handled away from the media, as I told him that going public would only hurt us both."

In the county's eviction complaint, deputy County Attorney Jon Jouben notes that Corporate Jet Solutions has not paid its rent since the beginning of August. Earlier this month, airport manager Kevin Daugherty put the company on notice that it owed $32,864.16 for its leases, and to pay up or face eviction. Corporate Jet Solutions officials met last week with county officials to try to work out a compromise but several hours later filed paperwork seeking the injunction.

Side Job Earns High Marks for Sossamon

Author: Times Staff

Hernando County commissioners like what they see in their county administrator/economic development director, Len Sossamon.

On Tuesday, Commissioner Diane Rowden reminded her colleagues that six months have passed since Sossamon took on economic development as a side job, and that it was time to negotiate a permanent agreement if commissioners were satisfied with his performance.

Commissioners agreed to allow the county attorney to negotiate an agreement to examine at a future meeting. "I think our administrator is doing a very good job," Commissioner Nick Nicholson said. Though six months perhaps didn't seem like a long time for a full assessment, Nicholson said, "in a very short time, we've seen some good results."

Hernando Leader Scores High Marks

Author: Barbara Behrendt

For the second straight year, Hernando County Administrator Len Sossamon has earned high scores from county commissioners, including two perfect evaluations. Hired in May 2012, Sossamon's overall score this year was 4.428 on a scale of 1 to 5, with 5 meaning "excellent/proficient." That is up from last year's score of 4.09.

Commission Chairman Wayne Dukes and Commissioner Diane Rowden, who don't always agree on issues, gave Sossamon 5's in each of 15 categories, ranging from planning and organizing to humor and ethics. Dukes praised Sossamon for thinking outside the box, being a good communicator and stepping up to take on more responsibilities. In addition to serving as administrator, Sossamon agreed several months ago to take on the role of economic development director.

For Sossamon's goals in the year ahead, Dukes wrote "fast track" of projects. "The county administrator has brought back consistency in government," Rowden wrote. "He respects the county employees as the backbone of the organization and values their input. The administrator has gained the employees' respect through his management style. "Mr. Sossamon is such a breath of fresh air for Hernando County's administrator position." Rowden suggested that Sossamon continue to delegate more work to his four assistant administrators so he can spend more time on economic development.

Commissioner Dave Russell noted that Sossamon's involvement in community functions was a good reflection on the county and he wrote that the administrator has "strong visioning for enhancing quality of life initiatives." Sossamon's lowest score came from Commissioner Jim Adkins, who gave him only one 5 - for "communication with the governing body." Sossamon, 63, who came to Hernando from North Carolina, did not complete a self-evaluation.

Hernando Administrator Accepted Free Game Ticket

Author: Barbara Behrendt

On Jan. 8, Hernando County Administrator Len Sossamon joined three local University of Florida supporters in Gainesville to watch the school's basketball team take on Sossamon's favorite squad, the University of South Carolina Gamecocks. The Gators won. One of their most prominent local fans, SunTrust Bank executive Jim Kimbrough, picked up the tab for Sossamon's $20 general admission ticket.

On Tuesday, after questions were raised about the game, Sossamon told the Times that he had invited Kimbrough to his office so he could repay him for the ticket. "In about an hour I'm going to insult Mr. Kimbrough and give him a check for $20," Sossamon said. He also planned to tell Kimbrough that he couldn't travel out of the county with him again, but he would be free to meet with him in his office. A dozen years ago, another county administrator - Paul McIntosh - was pushed out of his job after it was revealed that he accepted sports tickets from local business leaders and a round of golf at the exclusive Black Diamond golf course in Citrus County from Kimbrough.

While the cost of the ticket Sossamon accepted doesn't meet the $25 "minimal value" outlined in the county's gift policy, the news of the trip to Gainesville still riled up one commissioner. Commissioner Nick Nicholson said he didn't care whether Sossamon repaid Kimbrough for the ticket or not. "It's a concern of mine," Nicholson said. "I would just prefer for him not to do these kinds of things." Nicholson said that Sossamon should meet Kimbrough only in his office and that trips and long lunches send a bad message because Sossamon "is with people who are trying to influence his decision making."

In the past, Nicholson has voiced concerns about Kimbrough, who is influential in local politics, meeting individually with commissioners. "Mr. Kimbrough has come to my office before and left not happy, to say the least," Nicholson said. Nicholson said he planned to talk to Sossamon about the perception of influence and to remind him that he answers to commissioners. "The five of us are his boss," he said. Sossamon said he was invited to the game because he is a Gamecock fan. He said he went in an effort to mend fences between the government and business leaders. "It was all in good spirit to make amends with the business community," he said.

Also along on the trip were Cliff Manuel, president of Coastal Engineering, and local lawyer Bruce Snow, who is a past county attorney. During the ride with Manuel and Snow, Sossamon said they talked about sports, Hernando County history and who is related to whom. Sossamon also acknowledged a discussion about barbecue, a topic near to his heart. The three met Kimbrough in Ocala and then traveled to Gainesville for the game. They each bought themselves water, peanuts and popcorn. Sossamon also got Gator pompoms, which still sit in his office. "Nobody bought them for me," he said, and no county business was discussed.

Other than that trip, he acknowledged only one other out-of-the-county trip with Kimbrough. The other was to Dade City, where they met with Billy Brown of the Withlacoochee River Electric Cooperative to talk about the utility's industrial land adjacent to the Brooksville Walmart distribution center. That conversation happened before the County Commission gave Sossamon the additional duties of being the county's economic development director.

County Commissioner Diane Rowden, who also has been critical in the past of private meetings between Kimbrough and county commissioners, didn't see a problem with the basketball tickets, especially since Sossamon paid back the cost. "I have full confidence and trust in Mr. Sossamon, and if he said he didn't discuss county business, I have no reason to doubt that," she said. "He didn't violate any policy by going to a basketball game."

Hernando Leader Takes on Extra Role

Author: Barbara Behrendt

When Hernando County lost its business development manager to the private sector in August, county commissioners embarked on a nationwide search to find a replacement with a proven track record. They found that person Tuesday, and he had been sitting in the room with them all along. Commissioners on Tuesday agreed to allow County Administrator Len Sossamon to take on the role of economic development director in addition to his job of running the county, at least on a trial basis.

When Sossamon was hired, part of the appeal, commissioners said at the time, was his experience as both administrator and economic development point person in his old job in Concord, N.C. Among his accomplishments there was developing the city's airport and industrial areas. After a national search to replace Michael McHugh, 31 applicants were narrowed to just two to be interviewed in person. The interviewers - including Sossamon, his staff, commissioners and local business leaders - decided neither one was the right fit. On Tuesday, Sossamon asked what to do next.

Commissioner Wayne Dukes suggested hiring a professional recruiter, which is how the commission found Sossamon nearly two years ago. But Commissioner Jim Adkins suggested that Sossamon be tapped for the job because he had done it before, even if just temporarily. In his current job, he has already been involved in some economic development activities, he said. Commissioner Nick Nicholson said he had been talking to Sossamon about the possibility for months. "He's got the track record," he said. "I'm in agreement," said Chairman Dave Russell, as long as Sossamon didn't find that he was "spreading himself too thin."

Sossamon thanked the board and members of the public who spoke up in favor of the idea. He said he was happy to take on the challenge and would let commissioners know if he was in over his head. The choice takes the county in a different direction, one that puts the administrator in a more active business recruitment role. In recent months, there has been a tug of war between the county's airport and the administrator's office for control of the airport's industrial components. A proposal for how the new job will work will be negotiated between Sossamon and Russell and be brought back to a future meeting.

Commission Likes What it Sees in Sossamon

Author: Barbara Behrent

For his one-year anniversary as Hernando County administrator, Len Sossamon received the gift of a positive evaluation from county commissioners. His evaluation earned him a numeric score of 4.09 out of a possible 5 and none of the commissioners scored his qualities as below the standard of "meets expectations" in any category. The ranking is slightly higher than he gave himself in his self-evaluation, which averaged out to 4.07. Sossamon said that he felt good about the review by commissioners and that he was already making their suggested improvements. He earned his lowest score from Commissioner Nick Nicholson, who was also most detailed in his comments about work Sossamon needs to do. "Employee evaluations have not been done for years," Nicholson wrote. "After a year on the job, I would have hoped that you knew about this without me bring(ing) it to your attention."

That's the same criticism Nicholson leveled at Sossamon during a recent commission meeting. Since that time, Sossamon has met with his assistant administrators and supervisors have been told that they must have their evaluations up to date by the end of May. Those who don't will be reprimanded, he said. Nicholson also jabbed at the county utilities department, saying that it needs to be reorganized and that there are too many supervisors. Sossamon said that he has already talked about this to Brian Malmberg, assistant administrator for operations, and that Malmberg is looking into it. Nicholson also urged Sossamon to get a new fleet manager on board and the administrator said he is working on that as well. As a weakness, Nicholson wrote that Sossamon "needs to know when county policies are not followed. Can improve by having people reporting to him telling him what is going on."

Sossamon's recent reorganization, which narrowed his core managers to four assistant administrators, is accomplishing that goal, Sossamon said. Not all of Nicholson's comments on the administrator were negative. He noted that Sossamon worked hard, finished tasks, listened well to his commissioners and was always accessible. Commission Chairman Dave Russell urged Sossamon to implement his strategic plan and Sossamon said he will soon be bringing that before the commission, possibly as early as the end of the month. Russell also noted that Sossamon "has done well in his efforts to boost morale in his management team and county employees. His community outreach program has struck a positive chord with the public as well."

"Len hit the ground running," wrote Commission Wayne Dukes. "His experience in the private sector in addition to his government work experience has already shown to be beneficial to his role as county administrator." Commissioner Jim Adkins wrote that he wants Sossamon to keep working on economic development and he noted that the administrator has a "good management style. Very good keeping me well advised." Sossamon's highest marks came from Commissioner Diane Rowden. She noted that his "communications skills are excellent." In his self-evaluation, Sossamon listed what he perceived as his accomplishments in his first year. The were "restructuring the county's operations, reorganizing Animal Services, dealing with last spring's "monsoon season," dealing with issues of trust with the citizens and the press." His goals for the upcoming year are to get his strategic plan approved and put in place, to soon receive oil spill money though the Restore Act to benefit Hernando County and to continue to restructure government to make it more efficient. Sossamon also sought help from commissioners, asking them to be "precise in directives," and to help him "anticipate problems or areas of concern that I am not hear(ing) about. This way we can be more proactive and less reactive."

After seven months on the job, the honeymoon is over for Hernando County's newest administrator. Sossamon has confronted mismanagement at Animal Services; a commission trying to micromanage his selection of a public safety director; and anti-government hostility at a recent town hall meeting called to cull budget ideas on county services.

Of Sossamon's five current bosses, only two initially wanted to hire him, though Russell acquiesced immediately to make the selection unanimous. Sossamon is seeking to get the commission to look beyond the seat-of-its-pants governing that dominates much of the decision-making at the county building and take a long-range view of Hernando County's ambitions and how the commission can achieve them.

Sossamon Gets 1st Review

Author: Michael D. Bates

"A model of efficiency." "Leading the charge to improve citizens' perception of government." "Handles employee challenges professionally and fairly." "A refreshing, take-charge attitude." These were some of the remarks from county commissioners when they evaluated their new county administrator after his first six months on the job. Only these were from 2008, and the administrator was David Hamilton.

Hamilton was fired about 3 1/2 years later after commissioners criticized his professional judgment, blamed him for a severe drop in employee morale and questioned his role in promoting directors. "I do not have any confidence left in this administrator to lead this organization," Commissioner Jeff Stabins said in a November 2011 meeting. Fast forward to November 2012 and the first performance evaluation of County Administrator Leonard Sossamon. In his first six months on the job, commissioners gave Sossamon a sterling evaluation, receiving an overall 3.93 average out of a maximum 5. That puts Sossamon well within the "excellent-proficient" category.

Among other things, Sossamon was evaluated on such things as decision-making, initiative, customer service, dependability and leadership. Like his predecessor, Sossamon is still in the "honeymoon period" and commissioners are expecting the best. But this time, they hope Sossamon breaks the routine of rapidly departing administrators and erases the stigma that Hernando County cannot keep an administrator around long enough to stabilize the organization. Incoming commissioner Diane Rowden, criticized during her previous tenure on the board and in the just-concluded political campaign for her style of micromanagement, said she will maintain a "hands-off" policy toward Sossamon and allow him to do his job.

New commissioner Nick Nicholson, though, believes there has been too little oversight of county administrators in the past and intends to keep a close eye on Sossamon to make sure he is monitoring department heads and weeding out the bad ones. Nicholson said he doesn't put much stock in Sossamon's six-month evaluation because he hasn't been there long enough to learn the ins and outs of the community or government or familiarize himself with employees. "It's too much to learn (in six months)," he said. Nicholson said Sossamon should have had enough time on the job to start implementing some of his initiatives instead of doing things "off the cuff."

Commissioner Jim Adkins said the next six months will be more telling for Sossamon as he starts from the beginning the crafting of a new fiscal year budget and deals with the reorganization of the county utility department. From hereon, evaluations will likely be tougher, especially as Sossamon is expected to get a major chunk of his much-awaited long-term strategic plan for Hernando County completed. Adkins said Sossamon is inheriting a different atmosphere from Hamilton, who almost from the start was forced to cut directors, trim employees and streamline government. That led to ill will for many in the system, he said. Adkins said he intends to continue talking to Sossamon about issues but not to the point of micromanaging. "I don't ever want to do that," he said.

County Commissioner Dave Russell said he has great hopes for his administrator. He describes Sossamon as "extremely congenial, and it's meant a lot to the folks who work under him." Hamilton was criticized as time went on for his lack of "people skills" and a decline in morale. "I don't want to compare the two," Russell said. "They're two different people. Sossamon was hired in May and faced a tumultuous budgetary session. He was immediately faced with a breakdown of management in animal services. A tropical storm caused huge residential and commercial damage and destroyed much of the Peck Sink stormwater project.

In his performance self-evaluation, Sossamon said he has worked to manage many of those problems. "I have worked to find new revenue sources to help bring the budget into better control," Sossamon wrote. He lists as his accomplishments the reorganization of stormwater management, animal services and code enforcement. His objectives include developing a "smoother and better process for the annual budget" and to finish the county's strategic plan. As chairman of the county commission, Wayne Dukes said he probably interacts the most with the administrator. "I'm impressed by what I see," Dukes said. "He's bringing a lot of new ideas and setting good standards for the workers." Dukes added someone would have to work hard to receive a poor six-month evaluation. "If you screw up your first six months, you better be looking for a bus trip home," he said.

The first 100 days

Author: Michael D. Bates

Most days, Leonard Sossamon will leave his second-floor office at the downtown government center after work, travel the short distance to his rented Brooksville home, put on shorts and sneakers and do a four- or five-mile walk around the neighborhood. Coming from North Carolina, the county administrator says he doesn't mind the heat and humidity. If he's in the mood, Sossamon cooks up some pasta or pork chops, kicks back with a book or watches something on the Food Channel. Often, he drives back to his office for some late-night work where he is undisturbed by the daytime crush of appointments and interruptions.

Sossamon recently passed the 100-day mark of his tenure. He didn't even realize it until a Hernando Today reporter reminded him. He's just been too busy: there was Tropical Storm Debby that came through in June, causing flooding problems that still linger. Another storm, Isaac, caused some anxiety before moving away from the area. Animal Services was in the midst of a controversy following the public outcry about the same day euthanasia of a dog and other operation practices. County commissioners were in the thick of budget battles, and dealing with a shortfall that seemed to increase weekly.

Even with the hectic schedule, Sossamon, 62, has managed to shoehorn in the occasional drive to North Carolina, to visit his wife Esther, who is staying on there until she retires from her AT&T job in June. And through it all, Sossamon has been putting the finishing touches on a 25-year strategic plan for Hernando County. That plan, which Sossamon calls his baby, is almost complete and charts a course for where he believes Hernando County must go to remain economically strong and a place people want to live. "I heard a lot of talk about strategic plans when I got here but I never actually saw one," Sossamon said.

Sossamon, who worked with the Alliance Development Group LLC in Charlotte N.C. before coming here, said he's only been here three months and he is already enamored of the county. Hernando County, he said, is fortunate to be rural but so close to the urban areas of Tampa and St. Petersburg. He likes the geographical and topographical dichotomy of the county: rolling hills in the east and the gulf on the west. And everywhere he goes, he sees a sea of green. Looking out of his huge windowed office at the government center, he points out the green trees and foliage of downtown Brooksville and beyond.

County commissioners were looking for a "people person" in their next administrator and Sossamon would seem to fit that description. He also plans to break the string of revolving door administrators who up and leave soon after being hired. Whether it's talking to the custodial staff at the government office or patrons at local stores and restaurants, Sossamon says it's indicative of who he is. With his distinctive Southern accent and demeanor, Sossamon seems unflappable during county commission meetings when he has to defuse many citizens' complaints or answer tough questions from staff. He believes his relationship with board members is solid. Former administrator David Hamilton fell out of favor with commissioners toward the end of his tenure.

The board cited morale problems with employees and a lack of trust. Sossamon says he believes morale has improved and believes in open communication with department heads and board members to avoid some of the administrative landmines that blew up in front of the previous officeholder.

Outside the boardroom

In his spare time, Sossamon says he likes to cook. He prides himself on a mean chili recipe, but admits people may need a cast iron stomach. "I made some chili recently and on a scale of 1-10 in hotness it was a nine-plus," he jokes. His taste in books is eclectic and ranges from professional journals, local and out-of-state newspapers and some fiction.

He is a huge football fan and has a special affinity for the University of North Carolina Tarheels. Of course, the recent Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Carolina Panthers game posed somewhat of a dilemma for Sossamon. But because he now considers this area his home, "I was actually pulling for the Bucs," he said.

Sossamon is a NASCAR fan and has a signed Richard Petty cap in his office. He admires Dale Earnhardt Jr. There are also motorcycle helmets displayed on the shelves. Sossamon said he rode cycles when he was younger. "I wrecked three of them so I don't ride anymore," he joked. A jazz aficionado, Sossamon has displayed a poster of Dizzy Gillespie from the 2007 South Carolina Jazz Festival.

'Face guy of the county'

Sossamon said he is confident Animal Services is on the right track and he continues to meet regularly with Public Safety Director Mike Nickerson to solidify new and existing policies to increase efficiency. He hopes to present to the board either Oct, 25 or early next month a proposal to hire a veterinarian to temporarily manage that department.

He is pleased the county was able to get much of the heavy lifting on the budget done before the recent first public hearing so there were no surprises at the last minute. The county, he said, has cut about half its workforce and he is not sure there is any wiggle room left to lay off more people without compromising services.

His challenge after this 2013 budget is over is to start almost immediately on the following year seeking untapped revenue sources. He will meet with his leadership committee to discuss strategy. "We'll take about a month breather after this one is put to bed and then start on the next year," he said. "We're down about 50 percent employees. So now we will look for ways to increase revenue and maintain services with no tax increases." Sossamon said he didn't want to dip into reserves to balance this most recent budget, but there was no time left to explore any other avenues.

Internet – Newspaper Archives Searches
Leonard B. Sossamon
(Articles are in reverse chronological order)

Sossamon said he also wants to roll out a countywide stormwater management plan that will better protect area roads and address flooding concerns made evident from recent storms. To facilitate that, county commissioners recently transitioned the county's stormwater management department under the Department of Public Works.

Sossamon said a county administrator's job is more than hanging out in the office, shuffling papers and meeting with staffers. It's getting out in the community and connecting with people, he said. To that end, he has spoken to numerous community and civic groups. "I'm the face guy of the county," he said.

And Sossamon shares at least one attribute with his predecessor. He refuses to let negativity rule him and won't engage in verbal battles. "Lose your temper, lose the argument," he said. "My wife calls me an eternal optimist. I'll look for ways to make things happen."

'He's enjoying himself

County Commissioner Dave Russell said he is impressed so far with Sossamon, especially with his initial response to problems when he took the top spot. "He didn't come on like a bull in a china shop," Russell said. "He's come in engaged with various departments in depth. He hasn't been terribly outspoken on any issue. At this point in time I think what he's doing is forming a game plan."

Russell said he believes Sossamon and his management team handled the animal services firestorm successfully and didn't overreact to any of the subsequent county audit findings of department inefficiencies.

Commissioner Jim Adkins said he enjoys talking with Sossamon and was pleased he took the time to familiarize himself with the county and the issues. Adkins said Sossamon came in 100 days ago and inherited a far different situation than former administrator Hamilton. "When Hamilton came in 2008, government was big and he had to do some drastic cutting," Adkins said. "The county was bloated. Hamilton was forced to make several employee cuts, which affected morale. Adkins said. By the time Sossamon got here, much of that was done.

"He's a people person," Adkins said. "He gets out, he takes trips with department heads and divisions. He looks over their divisions. He's enjoying himself."

OFFICIAL RESIGNS AFTER CLASH OVER DISCIPLINE

Author: Tony Marrero

The damage caused to the Peck Sink stormwater project has spread beyond the borders of the site off Wiscon Road and into the offices of the county Utilities Department. Dale Ravencraft, manager of the department's engineering staff, resigned abruptly Monday from his $90,563-a-year post. His boss, county environmental services director Susan Goebel-Canning, confirmed on Tuesday that Ravencraft was given the option to resign or be fired. "There was a series of events basically indicating his inability to manage his staff," Goebel-Canning said.

Ravencraft's departure is the culmination of a weekslong disagreement with Goebel-Canning over whether to discipline Diana Koontz, the engineer who has helped oversee the Peck Sink project. Koontz, who joined the engineering department in January 2011, diverged from the design plans by directing the contractor to plant grass at the site instead of laying sod.

Ravencraft told the Times he concluded two weeks ago that Koontz was the victim of what he called an unethical campaign to discredit her. He said he started cleaning out his desk at that point because he realized he could no longer work for Goebel-Canning. "Once I saw the direction that Susan was taking with this, I knew that I couldn't work with her," he said. "It's a throwback to (former County Administrator) David Hamilton and his style, and I can't work under those kinds of conditions, a cloud of intimidation or retaliation."

Awarded to Goodwin Brothers Construction in June 2011, the $1.3 million project on the north side of Wiscon Road, southwest of Brooksville, includes swales, lined ponds, piping and plants to treat the stormwater entering Peck Sink Preserve. The sink serves as the drain into the aquifer for a large area from southwest Brooksville to the Hernando County Airport.

In April, Koontz directed the contractor to plant seed instead of laying sod, which was expected to save about $50,000. That directive, though a cost saver, conflicted with the original recommendations by the county's consultant, King Engineering. Ravencraft was on vacation at the time, Goebel-Canning said, and Koontz did not consult her or the other senior engineer on staff. Diverging from the plan relieved King of possible liability for damage that later was caused by tropical storms Beryl and Debby. "It basically was like gambling with the county's money," Goebel-Canning said. "It placed the county in a very unfavorable position."

When Goebel-Canning directed Ravencraft to give Koontz a written reprimand, he tried to persuade his boss to reconsider. Koontz made a well-intentioned mistake, Ravencraft said, so counseling and training would be appropriate. Goebel-Canning insisted, so Ravencraft handed Koontz a reprimand memo on July 2. A week later, the county's administrative services director, Cheryl Marsden, asked Ravencraft about the status of the reprimand. By then, Ravencraft had changed his mind and told Marsden and Goebel-Canning he would not be completing the official reprimand form. "I could not ethically participate in what I saw as an undeserved and punitive response which would only serve to stain the reputation of the most productive member of my staff and achieve no positive results," Ravencraft wrote later in a lengthy memo to County Administrator Len Sossaman.

Marsden told the Times on Tuesday that Ravencraft had been "insubordinate to Susan and pretty much undermined her authority." Still, Ravencraft and Goebel-Canning reached a compromise, agreeing to give Koontz a verbal reprimand. But Ravencraft dragged his feet, Goebel-Canning said, so she gave him a verbal reprimand.

Ravencraft, who started work with the county in 2006, said that shocked him. He said he was never given a time frame to give Koontz the warning. Ravencraft asked that the verbal reprimand of him be rescinded. He also denied assertions by Goebel-Canning that he had failed to properly manage his staff.

In the memo to Sossaman, Ravencraft said that ongoing tension between Koontz and his administrative assistant, Denise Kane-Agosto, was the only ongoing issue among his employees, and that he had tried without success to clear the air. He also wrote that he thought Goebel-Canning, influenced by gossip stemming from the disharmony between the two women, decided to take a hard line against Koontz. Goebel-Canning denied that. She said the dispute between Koontz and Kane-Agosto is evidence Ravencraft had failed to tend to personnel matters.

In a two-page memo to Sossaman asking that her verbal reprimand be rescinded, Koontz said she had repeatedly expressed concerns about King's performance and errors that caused the county to incur additional costs. She also recalled a directive from at least one county commissioner to get the project done without additional change orders. "(T)he county has chosen to give me a reprimand for a decision that I feel was the only option," Koontz wrote. She declined to comment Tuesday when reached by the Times.

Sossaman said he supported Goebel-Canning's actions. "It looked like there were some management decisions that should have been made" by Ravencraft, Sossaman said.

The position will be filled as soon as possible, Goebel-Canning said. The job will be advertised, and in-house applicants will be considered. The repairs needed at Peck Sink are expected to cost about $150,000, but it remains unclear who will cover that, Goebel-Canning said. Sod will be put down at the site.

Inside Leonard Sossamon
Author: Michael D. Bates

Leonard Sossamon spent the past week moving from North Carolina to his new home in Hernando County. On Monday, he will settle into his second-floor office and become Hernando County's newest county administrator, and the public will see him in action during his first commission meeting Tuesday. Will Sossamon be the man who bucks the trend and stays in the job more than a few years? County commissioners hope so, and Sossamon says he has every intention of doing so. Hernando Today talked to the 61-year-old North Carolinian this week to learn what he will do when he starts his duties.

Here is part of that interview:

Q: What will your first week on the job look like?

A: I will start meeting with staff, talking with (interim County Administrator) Ron Pianta, (budget manager George Zoettlein) and others to go over the budget, where we are, because that's something that needs immediate attention. I want to find out where we are, what we have tried. Let's see if I can come up with some new ideas or twists on old ideas. Then, obviously, I will be talking with the commissioners and different department heads. It's going to be a busy week.

Q: There is a perceived high level of dissatisfaction toward county government officials. What will you do to reduce the level of negativity in the community?

A: I want to see exactly where the origin of those feelings are, to see if they are valid or not and, if it is, see what we can do to change those attitudes. If there are problems, let's try to find a solution to them and build a bridge to re-establish that trust. Residents must know their problems are going to be heard. The (county administrator) needs to re-establish that foundation with not only the public but also with the staff. As the lead person, I will be the person most of the time that people will expect to carry the ball and go a long way in terms of establishing trust with the public.

Q: Hernando County has not had a good track record of retaining administrators. How do you plan to reverse that trend?

A: Hopefully, I'm going to be the first person who can reverse that trend. I believe in doing the best job possible, being compassionate with concerns and trying to find the way to solve problems that exist and lead by example by being out front. I don't look at this as a stepping stone. I don't even think about retiring, I really don't. I like to stay active and busy. As long as the commissioners, the public, are happy and I'm happy, why not stay? I look forward to being here on (Monday), and I hope everyone has good expectations. That meeting the second day will obviously be interesting and exciting.

Q: How long will it take you to get up to speed on Florida law?

A: There are some similarities between Florida and North Carolina. The Florida (Government-in-the-Sunshine Law) is probably more rigid, more strict, and I'm sure the county attorney, Garth Collier, will keep me straight on that, so I will count on him.

Q: The community was incensed by the same-day euthanizing of an 8-month-old pit bull at animal services. The county clerk's office is doing an audit of the department. Have you been following this issue?

A: I guess the hot-button issue is animal services. I have been following it. I haven't had a chance to talk in detail (with staff), but I've read the newspaper articles and watched part of a meeting where it was discussed. I want to sit down when the audit is completed and find out what happened.

Q: How will you work with the media?

A: I will try and be as open as possible and as responsive as possible. I think the public should be informed, and I think the media coverage (in Hernando County) is good.

Q: Do you plan to be visible in the community? What is your impression of Hernando County, based on your recent visit?

A: I do get out and about. I like to exercise. I am more of a people person, (and) everybody appears to be very friendly.

Q: Explain your management style. Should there be a clear-cut chain of command?

A: I like to have my door open and talk with people, public and staff. Obviously there is a chain of command, but (I) like to help staff solve problems, and if they need help, give me a holler. Why have department heads if you do not let them do their jobs?

* * * * *

Sossamon's wife, Esther, will stay in North Carolina for about a year until she wraps up her job there and retires. Until then, he will be living in Hernando County alone. "It won't be the easiest thing," he said. "But she has vacation time built up over the years, so we'll have long weekends and holidays, and I'm looking forward to that."

Sossamon Tabbed as New Hernando County Administrator

Author: Michael D. Bates

Leonard Sossamon said he can't wait to hit the ground running as county administrator of Hernando County. The weather is gorgeous, the people seem nice and he believes he will get along well with commissioners and government employees. With a 5-0 vote of support from his bosses under his belt, Sossamon said he expects to work out contract details and start work within 30-60 days. "I really do appreciate the vote of confidence from the Hernando County board of commissioners and I look forward to working with them, as well as the citizens and the Hernando County staff," Sossamon said. Sossamon, 61, was one of three finalists recommended by the consulting firm of Baenziger & Associates. Heading into Tuesday's vote, he was also the favorite, as reported in Hernando Today over the weekend.

Commissioners said Sossamon's successful track record in diversifying industry while administrator in Newberry was impressive and hoped he would do the same in Hernando County, which has seen the construction industry tank. Four out of five commissioners chose Sossamon via straw poll before Tuesday's formal selection. Commissioner Dave Russell, who chose none of the three finalists, changed his mind and threw his support behind Sossamon in a spirit of cooperation. "I was just looking for a little bit more," Russell said after the meeting. But Russell said Sossamon was the strongest of the three and doesn't want him to think he doesn't have his full support going into the job. "I think it's important he recognize I'm behind him 100 percent," Russell said. "I want him to be successful."

Russell said he is impressed by Sossamon's experience and demeanor. "I want him to spend the next couple years proving I was dead wrong in not supporting him from the get-go," Russell said. "We look forward to a new direction in Hernando County," Commission Chairman Wayne Dukes said. Sossamon has two years' experience as a county administrator in Newberry, S.C. and 13 years as city manager in Concord, N.C. Sossamon said his first priority will be tackling the 2013 budget. He was in town last week when county commissioners learned in a workshop they were staring at a $9.5 million shortfall.

Sossamon said economic development and jobs creation will be high on his radar when he starts. He plans to bolster the manufacturing sector and target medical-technical jobs. He said he would examine where budget cuts can be made without sacrificing resident services. He was pleased the county has developed a new tourism marketing plan, designed to maximize bed tax dollars and target certain travelers. Sossamon is married and has no children. Born in the South, he has not been a frequent visitor to Florida but knows the warm weather will be right up his alley. "I'd rather have it 95 degrees than 35," he jokes.

Sossamon will replace former administrator David Hamilton, who was fired last November after the board said it lost confidence in his ability to manage. They also criticized Hamilton's people skills which they believe led to low morale in the government center. Hamilton's tenure lasted three-and-a-half years, longer than anyone in that position since Chuck Hetrick, who had served from 1984-97. Sossamon will be the county's ninth administrator since Hetrick left.

On his resume, Sossamon states he has been co-founder and owner of Cabernet Holdings since 2006 to the present. He also lists himself as CEO and executive vice president of Alliance Development Group LLC in Charlotte, N.C. Cabernet Holdings in Concord N.C., filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in April 2010 to head off foreclosure proceedings against him and his partner, who owned the Holiday Inn Express in Lexington. But commissioners chalked up the bankruptcy to the economy and did not sway their votes.

The other two finalists for the position were Ed Green, who spent the last 14 years as county manager for Garfield County, Colo.; and James Wilson, who served as the equivalent to a county administrator for nine years in Galveston, Texas and was also director of housing and community development. The job was advertised at $120,000-$160,000. Hamilton made $134,999 annually. Land Services Director Ron Pianta will remain as interim administrator until Sossamon takes the reins.

Finalist Has Money Woes

Author: Michael D. Bates

At least two county commissioners said they are leaning toward Leonard Sossamon as their choice to take over the top managerial job in Hernando County. Sossamon, 61, was one of three finalists for the county administrator's position. Whether that support will evaporate with the knowledge that Sossamon was involved in a bankruptcy two years ago will be determined Tuesday, when commissioners are slated to pick their next manager. As of Friday, the support still seems to be there and they chalked up Sossamon's failed business venture to a bad economy.

Hernando Today has learned that Sossamon's company, Cabernet Holdings in Concord, N.C., filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in April 2010 to head off foreclosure proceedings against him and his partner, who owned the Holiday Inn Express in Lexington, N.C. Cabernet Holdings is a limited liability company in Lexington owned by Sossamon and Dan Boone, each as a 50-50-member-manager of the LLC. The paperwork was filed in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, Middle District of North Carolina.

According to paperwork, NewBridge Bank in January 2010 started foreclosure proceedings against the company, which it said owed the bank some $6.6 million. On his resume, Sossamon states he has been co-founder and owner of Cabernet Holdings since 2006 to the present. He also lists himself as CEO and executive vice president of Alliance Development Group LLC in Charlotte, N.C. In July 2010, a foreclosure auction was held at the Holiday Inn and another hotel chain won with a $5.6 million bid. Sossamon, contacted Friday, said his firm developed the Holiday Inn Express for a group of investors who, at the last minute, did not close on the deal and that left Cabernet holding the bag. He said there was no option but to file for Chapter 11 corporate bankruptcy.

County Commissioner John Druzbeck said Sossamon likely didn't disclose the bankruptcy episode for the same reason former administrator David Hamilton would probably not disclose his involvement with the controversial Hernando Beach channel dredging project. Hamilton was roundly criticized for his management of that much-delayed project. "You're going to find something in everyone's past that may be questionable, if you want to call it that," Druzbeck said.

Druzbeck said bankruptcies are occurring everywhere given the economy. "It was a business investment that obviously did not do well," Druzbeck said of Sossamon's failed venture. In addition to his private sector background, Sossamon was county administrator of Newberry, S.C. from 2004-06. He was also city manager of Concord from 1985-98. Sossamon was one of three people who made the short list of Baenziger & Associates, hired by county commissioners for about $21,000 to conduct a nationwide search for the county administrator position. In the interview notes conducted by Baenziger's staff, the bankruptcy is not mentioned. [CB&A Note:

To correct this article, the bankruptcy was disclosed in Mr. Sossamon's materials.] Nor did it come up during this week's public interview session held by county commissioners.'

Currently, with his privately owned entities, Sossamon is making $145,000, his profile said. When he was employed with the city of Newberry, he made $107,000. Druzbeck said Sossamon is "the better fit" for Hernando County than the other two candidates.

Newberry, where he served as county administrator, is demographically similar to Hernando County and he has faced many of the same financial challenges the local board is facing. "I think what Mr. Sossamon offers is something closer to what Hernando County needs and has been striving for," Druzbeck said. When the textile industry soured in Newberry, Sossamon strove to diversify the county's industry to revive a dying tax base, he said. Druzbeck is also impressed with Sossamon's efforts in North Carolina to help establish manufacturing parks, an airport and nurturing private-public partnerships. "I just think he brings more to the table for Hernando County than the other two candidates," he said.

* * * * *

County Commissioner Jim Adkins said he too is leaning toward Sossamon, especially after this week's one-on-one meetings with all three candidates and the public interviews. Adkins said he was impressed with Sossamon's efforts to revitalize his county's economy. Hernando County, he said, is trying to do the same thing by reducing its reliance on the building industry. Sossamon seems to have a good vision for Hernando County. Adkins said he asked all three candidates if there were anything in their backgrounds that would embarrass the county and all three denied any skeletons. Adkins said he did not know about Sossamon's company bankruptcy but didn't think it was serious enough to raise issues.

These days, bankruptcies are not uncommon and as long as there is nothing criminally related, there shouldn't be a problem, Adkins said. However, the county human resources department will conduct a background check, he said. Sossamon, according to the interviewer with Baenziger & Associates, believes in "straightforward and honest communication. "He has created a positive atmosphere in the community by being transparent with all forms of media," the interviewer wrote. "He has nothing personally controversial in his background, nor has he done anything that would be potentially embarrassing to a future employer." When told of the bankruptcy filing, County Commissioner Dave Russell said it is "something we'll need to look at, obviously." Russell said he had not narrowed down his preference for the manager's position. All three seem to have the experience for the job, he said.

County Commission Chairman Wayne Dukes said he was aware of Sossamon's bankruptcy filing but doesn't believe it should be an issue. Dukes said Sossamon assured him there were no pending problems in his professional life that would be detrimental to doing the job here. But Dukes said he is keeping an open mind about all three candidates.

Hotel at Winery Files for Bankruptcy

Author: Vikki B. Hodges

The owners of the Holiday Inn Express Hotel & Suites at the Vineyard have filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection to stave off a foreclosure on the property. Cabernet Holdings, owned by Concord developers Leonard Sossamon and Dan Boone, filed for a Chapter 11 reorganization April 1, the last day of the upset period for the foreclosure sale, said William Miller of High Point law firm Roberson, Haworth & Reese. Miller was recently appointed receiver by the judge handling the bankruptcy case.

The foreclosure process was begun in January by NewBridge Bank, which claims it is owed approximately $6.6 million in loans. Miller said he has retained the hotel's management company, Myrtle Beach, S.C.-based Strand Management, to continue managing the property as the bankruptcy proceedings are completed. "It's business as usual," said Therese Henderson, general manager at hotel, the newest in Lexington. "In fact, we were basically sold out last week." She said customers last week included people attending the High Point Market, a group from the N.C. District Attorneys Association, business people from Matcor, a metal fabricator in Welcome that is adding staff, and Home Trust Bank, the new owners of Industrial Federal, who are also planning some training at the hotel's conference room facility.

Henderson said business has been up since September 2009, with the first four months of this year up substantially from the same period last year. She said the occupancy rate has been between 60 and 70 percent of late, and bookings are looking good for the remainder of the year. "It's not for a lack of business," Henderson said of Cabernet Holdings' financial difficulties. She said the company's problems stem back to July 2008 when Cabernet Holdings was set to sell the hotel it built to a buyer who backed out of the deal. Cabernet Holdings had only intended to develop the hotel, not manage it. When the sale fell through in the middle of the recession, the company decided to hire a management company to run it for them. "They inherited all the debt, then the economy crashed," she said. "It just wasn't a good time to open a hotel, but they didn't want it to sit empty."

After gaining a 30-day extension from an April 13 bankruptcy court hearing, Henderson said the owners plan to present a reorganization plan May 18 in court. She said the extension will allow them to pull together all the paperwork they need to show they can continue to operate the hotel and pay off the debt. Miller said the hearing May 18 will also address a couple of motions filed by NewBridge. The bank has filed for a dismissal of the Chapter 11 filing by Cabernet Holdings and has also filed a motion to allow it to proceed with the foreclosure sale, even if the Chapter 11 filing stands.

to the specifications of the Best Western chain. Then the hotel changed to a Hampton Inn and finally to Holiday Inn, one of the sponsors of Richard Childress Racing. In between those hotel franchise changes, the ownership also changed a couple of times, with Cabernet Holdings taking ownership in July 2008.

Graffiti or Urban Art?: Definition of What's Art, What's Not Inspires Debate

Author: Eric C. Deines

Through the ages, artists have pushed the definition of art and left critics to argue its merits. Has that argument now hit downtown Concord? Downtown property owner Leonard Sossamon may agree it has. At a Concord City Council meeting last week, Sossamon addressed the council concerning some graffiti -- or "urban art" -- that has appeared at the rear of his property at 11 Union St. South. The "urban art," as Sossamon referred to it at the meeting, features a spray-painted skateboarder, as well as some profanity and other markings. In a letter from the city, Sossamon was asked to remove the art within a given amount of days before a $100-a-day penalty was enacted. Concord's Chief of Police Merl Hamilton said the city keeps graffiti in check by applying its signage ordinance. If graffiti appears, Hamilton said, it's treated in the same manner as a sign that is out of compliance with the city code. "It's pop art," Sossamon said. "It's not a sign, because I'm not advertising anything." Hamilton said the city has policies that look to rid buildings of graffiti because it's seen as a stimulus for greater crimes. "It's a disorder issue, which often leads to crime," Hamilton said, comparing graffiti to a broken window.

If a broken window were left as such, Hamilton said, it may eventually lead to other broken windows on that same building. Then, vagrants may find it easy to enter the building, which could lead to several other crimes, such as drug abuse. Hamilton said a downtown area covered in graffiti may give the idea that downtown is an appropriate place to engage in criminal behavior. And gang-related graffiti, Hamilton said, already has its direct link to criminal activity. He said that graffiti is often reported by residents, code enforcement officers or city employees. Sossamon, who in 2007 completed a $2 million renovation of downtown's old Paramount building, said he knows several instances where graffiti art has been as accepted as true art. Sossamon also said he has considered commissioning such an artist to paint a mural on one of his buildings.

The letter that came to Sossamon from the city referred to the wrong city ordinance, which was actually found to only read "reserved," Sossamon said. Sossamon also addressed this matter as one of his concerns when speaking to Council. City Council agreed to waive any fine for the graffiti while a further study is conducted. "I don't know what I was in violation of, and I still don't," said Sossamon, a former Concord city manager. Hamilton said business owners are often given a seven-day period to remove the graffiti before a penalty is enacted, though the city will work with owners to give them more time when necessary. At the City Council meeting, Sossamon also named some other locations around downtown where he found graffiti, including some city-owned properties. City Manager Brian Hiatt said the city-owned locations included in Sossamon's list were cleaned this week. Hiatt said that the city generally tries to have its building maintenance crews clean graffiti from city buildings within 48 hours.

Concord development group says thanks to 3

Author: Sharif Durhams

The Concord Downtown Development Corp. has honored three local residents and elected officers and board members. Chad Tarlton and Alex Rankin were recognized for outstanding volunteer efforts. The award is given to people who have given many hours for the organization and community.

Tarlton, vice president of Cabarrus Bank and Trust Co., was recognized for his support of downtown events throughout the year. He has given many hours of his personal time to help make events successful, including Union Street Live, the Spring into Arts Festival and Holiday Happenings, said Vickie Weant, CDDC's executive director.

Rankin, president of CESI and a member of CDDC's board of directors, was honored for his efforts to bring free wireless Internet service to the downtown area and his dedication to local economic development, Weant said.

CDDC presented its Keystone Award, which recognizes "a significant contribution to the enhancement of downtown," to Leonard Sossamon. Sossamon, a property owner and developer, revitalized 9 Union St. N., Weant said.

"This building, along with several others that Sossamon owns, has helped to bring downtown back to life," Weant said.

Board members and officers for 2008 are Sossamon, president; Rankin, vice president; Steve DeConti, secretary; Dan Levinson, treasurer; Will Swink, past president; Jeff Brady; Allen Craven; Janet Dearmon; and David McClellan.

County's creative financing garners award in bond deals

Author: Cindy Pitts

Creative financial dealings have led Newberry County to getting a second coveted award for the bond deal that kept Springfield Place and J.F. Hawkins Nursing Home open. Last week the county won the J. Mitchell Graham award at the S.C. Association of Counties meeting. This is the highest award given for achievement and progress in a county government. To get the award the county had to share their project with representatives from other counties.

County Council Chairman Mike Hawkins introduced the county's project and County Attorney Gary Pope gave the details through a Power Point presentation. Professors from Clemson, USC and a representative from the Department of Juvenile Justice judged the projects.

"They asked us a lot of questions," said Hawkins. "Going in I knew we were going to win." Hawkins said the project gave the county a unique way to refinance the bonds on the retirement centers and affected a number of people by allowing them to stay open. "Not only did this effect the residents but also their families," said Hawkins, adding if the financing had not come through then the county was looking at closing or selling the facility.

After getting their unique finance through on the retirement complex, the county used the same financing to refinance the bonds on the hospital. "I told them, 'We did it and you can, too,'" said Hawkins. The award will put the county on the cover of an upcoming issue of the Association of Counties' magazine.

The county also won the "Deal of the Year" award chosen by The Bond Buyer's bureau chief and editors in December.

Under the sponsorship of the county, J.F. Hawkins was established in 1965. To encourage growth and expansion of the facilities throughout its four decade history (including the addition of an Alzheimer's unit in 1996 and Springfield Place Retirement Community in 2000), the county provided financial support in the form of general obligation bonds issued under the county's 8 percent constitutional debt limit and periodic contributions of cash. With operations struggling by the late 1990s and the facilities teetering on bankruptcy by 2001, the county took the unprecedented step in 2002 of taking direct control of the facilities and incorporating them into county government as an enterprise fund to ensure continuity in the level of care. By so doing, however, the county also introduced an enterprise fund burdened by five privately placed loans with rates as high as 8.875 percent.

To right the financial ship, the county enlisted as its consultant, the South Carolina Jobs-Economic Development Authority (JEDA) and Merchant Capital to devise a refinancing of the facilities' high interest rate debt portfolio.

Under the guidance of then administrator Leonard Sossamon, County Council approved a financing and legal structure, which enabled the county to use general fund support for the facilities without threatening the county's 8 percent constitutional debt limit in the process.

"In essence, in addition to the normal debt service fund, the county pre-funded a debt service reserve fund that put aside a year's worth of debt service payment," said Sossamon. "If this reserve fund is drawn down during the year, then the county's obligation each budget year, subject to annual appropriation, is to fully replenish that fund to the extent that it was drawn down. This unique approach enabled the county to receive underlying investment grade ratings on the nursing home from both Moody's and S&P of Baa2 and BBB+, respectively."

The county was also able to secure bond insurance from Radian Asset Assurance, Inc. thereby allowing the offering to carry enhanced ratings of Aa3/AA from Moody's and S&P, respectively. The bonds were offered for public sale in April of 2005 with priority given to Newberry County investors.

As a direct consequence of the enthusiastic reception of the bonds by the investor community, the county secured a blended cost of funds of 4.8 percent, which translates to $300,000 in estimated annual savings, and initial estimated debt service coverage levels of greater than 160 percent.

The county did the same debt structure two months later on behalf of Newberry County Memorial Hospital. The refinancing resulted in a 25-year fixed rate of 4.54 percent and estimated debt service savings of $1.94 million in that endeavor.

Bond counsel for the county was Robert Galloway, of the Greenville Office of Haynsworth, Sinkler, Boyd.

County Looking for Leadership
Administrator Resigns-Again
Author: Cindy Pitts

A search is underway for a new county administrator. County Administrator Leonard Sossamon told County Council on Wednesday night that he would not be returning after a six month leave of absence. Sossamon resigned earlier this year due to his aging parents' health problems. He was later asked by council to take six months' leave and return in July.

On Wednesday night Sossamon told council that things with his parents had not improved, and he would not be returning. Council Chairman Mike Hawkins said working with Sossamon over the past two years has been a "fun ride" and he hopes Sossamon can help the county with future projects. Sossamon came to work for the county in January of 2004. Councilman Henry Summer will chair a committee assigned with hiring a new administrator.

After Sossamon's first resignation, Gene Klugh was hired as acting administrator and will remain in that position until a new administrator is named. Hawkins said the process could take six months but adds that Newberry County has lot to offer potential candidates.

County Administrator Resigns-Surprised Council to Search

Author: Cindy Pitts

Through a flow of tears, County Administrator Leonard Sossamon announced Wednesday night that he was resigning his duties with the county. The announcement, which was initially made in executive session, came as a shock to the county council. Sossamon stated he was leaving so that he could help care for his elderly parents, whose health is declining. "I admire your decision. It shows the great relationship you have with your family," said Councilman John Caldwell.

Councilman Andy Morris said Sossamon was the right person at the right time when he was hired in January of 2004. "We will be thanking you 10 years from now for your service to Newberry County and the things you have accomplished," said Councilman Henry Summer. Council Chairman Mike Hawkins said working with Sossamon over the past two years has been a "fun ride." "If you told him to do something you better mean it because he began to work on it that night or first thing the next morning. I appreciate the job he has done," said Hawkins, adding the resignation came as a surprise. "I will miss you. You put in a lot of hours for the county," said Councilman Bill Waldrop. "I hate to see you go," echoed Councilman Edgar Baker. Sossamon will work through the end of January and Hawkins said the county plans to continue to use Sossamon on some projects.

Special Source Refunding Saves South Carolina Nursing Home
Author: Tedra DeSue

Faced with the possibility of losing a key nursing home facility in its community, Newberry County, S.C., officials sold about $11.5 million of debt earlier in April in an unprecedented transaction that earned a Southeast honorable mention in The Bond Buyer's Deal of the Year Awards. The relatively small debt sale was recognized partly because it involved the issuance of special source refunding revenue bonds, which have never been sold for a nursing home in South Carolina. Proceeds were used to refinance several relatively high-interest loans - for a considerable amount of savings - that had previously been taken out for J.F. Hawkins Nursing Home.

Since the transaction closed, one other deal using a similar structure has sold, showing that the innovative structure can be duplicated, which is one of the factors The Bond Buyer's editors and bureau chiefs consider when judging deals for the awards. Newberry County sold the bonds, with Merchant Capital as underwriter and Haynsworth Sinkler Boyd bond counsel. Radian Asset Assurance Inc. insured the deal. A subsequent $11 million county issue for Newberry County Memorial Hospital was completed this summer. The nursing home deal was structured with fixed rate, tax-exempt revenue bonds going out 25 years. More than half of the total - $6.6 million - were term bonds that mature in 2021, 2025, and 2030.

Since 1965, the county has sold general obligation bonds to help the facility with its expansion and growth efforts. However, during the late 1990s, the nursing home's operations began to struggle and the facilities were teetering on bankruptcy, said Newberry County Administrator Leonard Sossamon. J.F. Hawkins' facilities include an Alzheimer's unit and a retirement community. To help them regain their financial footing, Newberry took the unprecedented step in 2002 to acquire the facilities and incorporate them as an enterprise fund. To do so, the county had to introduce an enterprise fund saddled with five privately placed loans with rates as high as 7.75%. That resulted in debt service coverage levels from 2000 and 2001 of 0.22 times and 0.97 times, respectively.

To improve coverage levels and generate some savings, county officials called on Merchant Capital and worked closely with banker Brent Robertson. The solution, they determined, was to issue the special-source refunding bonds. They were able to achieve a new rate of 4.81%, with a debt service savings of $300,000 a year. The deal ended up with underlying ratings of Baa2 from Moody's Investors Service and BBB-plus from Standard & Poor's. Those ratings are another reason officials take pride in the transaction, as it allowed them to convert what would have otherwise been treated as non-investment grade nursing home paper into a revenue bond of the county.

In addition, structuring the deal that way allowed for it to not be counted against the county's state-imposed debt limit. In South Carolina, a municipality cannot issue general obligation debt that exceeds 8% of its assessed property value without getting voter approval. This has often tied the hands of issuers, especially school districts that face growth-funding needs. Several of them have gotten around the limits by issuing installment purchase revenue bonds through nonprofit corporations. However, there was some public outcry that the structure was illegal, with critics charging that those bonds in fact amounted to school district debt and therefore should be considered as part of the debt limit statute.

For this deal, Sossamon said, there were no legal challenges. Also, several public hearings were held, and the transaction received support from the community. "We were able to do a marvelous job in freeing up capital and improving cash flow to help these facilities," Sossamon said. "People realized that this was a good bang for public dollars."

Downtown's Packing more and more Sizzle
New Tavern is Hoping to Pump Added Vitality into the Center City
Author: Jaime Levy

Friday's opening of the George Washington Bookstore & Tavern marks what could be a defining moment for downtown Concord. With the tavern opening its doors to high-profile nightlife - and the recent or coming debut of several other restaurants on Union Street, Concord's main strip - the city is on the brink of a downtown revival. It's been coming for a while. Three years ago, the Union Street Bistro set up shop at 48 Union St. S., bringing upscale and dinnertime dining downtown. In the past year, more downtown buildings have been bought and sold than in the previous five years combined. The city in March unveiled a master plan that pictured a lively downtown complete with good lighting, a grocery store, a bookstore, and plenty of restaurants.

Now, a lot of simmering developments are starting to boil. The Barry Patch - a sandwich and pizza shop across the street from the Cabarrus County Courthouse - opened a week ago. A European-style delicatessen and wine shop called Montmartre is slated to open next month. A group of developers are discussing restoring a movie theater that once existed in what is now known as the Mini-Mall. "We've got some momentum going," said Connie Kincaid, director of the Concord Downtown Development Corp. "Downtown is becoming more and more a dining and entertainment district. Especially with the opening of the George Washington, you see that's really the direction in which we're moving."

Many niches at once

Part restaurant, part bar, part music hall and part bookstore, the George Washington - housed in a restored 102-year-old building - will try to fill many niches at once. "I've been in Concord since 1978. When I got here, I was a little shocked there was really nothing to do outside of creating your own entertainment," said Laine Harling, the former city councilman who owns the tavern. "I think downtown is the heart of a community. We have a beautiful historic district. It's got character. "The community is thriving now with people looking for something to do without driving to Charlotte or the University area," he said. "Something they can put their hands on." The tavern has a stage, an in-house drum set and a musician's lounge, and Harling hopes it will help put Concord on the music map. He's booked performers each weekend through the end of the year (see Entertainment Calendar, Page 9K). "We're creating our own music scene," Harling said. "This is going to be, we hope, a venue for regional, and eventually national, acts."

Old and new together

By salvaging antique pieces of wood, marble and other items from around the county, Harling has put together a venue that he hopes will successfully combine old and new: the same double identity that all of "Classic Concord," the brand name for the city's historic district, is trying on. For example, developers at Hunter & Brown bought the Mini-Mall at 9 Union St. N. within the last year. Built in the early 1920s as the Paramount Theater, the building is now empty. "We like historical buildings," said Leonard Sossamon, a partner with Hunter & Brown. "We felt like maybe the time was right for something of that nature. A number of cities are trying to create downtowns. We're not trying to recreate it - we're just trying to preserve it."

More people downtown

Other area business owners say they are pleased to see more activity coming to the area - that, at this point, the market is far from being saturated. "The more people you have come to the area, the more exposure you have," said Raymond Hvasta, co-owner of the Union Street Bistro. "If they're coming downtown to go to the George Washington, chances are they'll pass by our place. The businesses can just feed off each other." Richard Barry, owner of The Barry Patch, agreed. "It's bringing more people to my end of town," he said. "I'm hoping to get them away from the malls and to our area of town for shopping."

Growing confidence

More new retail, however, is necessary to improve the viability of downtown Concord as a destination, Hvasta said. "I think we need better retail to get a nice mix of retail and restaurants," he said. "If you put 20 restaurants down here, nobody's going to make any money." As of now, Union Street is lined with several antique shops and a handful of specialty stores, including an equestrian gear shop and a sewing and needlecraft boutique. Kincaid, of the Downtown Development Corp., said she expected to see a growing group of retailers along the strip.

"Twenty years ago, this was the major retail center. Once Carolina Mall was built, most of the key anchors went to the mall," she said. "Now, small businesses want to come back downtown. It's not the malls where economists are predicting a major upswing. It's Main Street U.S.A." Kincaid said it makes sense for downtown to see a burst of activity now: The master plan, she said, gave investors a reason to look here. "Because we have (demographic) data and have just gone through an extensive visioning and planning process, people are (saying), 'Wow, these folks know where they want to go,'" Kincaid said. "Suddenly, there's confidence in the market." That's what Donna Wright says. Wright currently owns a children's store in Cornelius. Now the Concord resident is bringing the boutique - called Victoria & Friends - to 78 Union St. N. The shop will carry clothes, cribs, bedding and other items for children. "I started seeing more things opening up," she said. "That's what made me go ahead and do it now - before somebody else does."

N.C. Republicans Attacking Sossamon's Record

Author: Scott Jenkins

As the race for the 90th District seat in the N.C. House of Representatives heats up, the N.C. Republican Party is attacking Rep. Leonard Sossamon's brief legislative record. But Sossamon, a Democrat from Concord, says the party of his opponent, Linda Johnson of Kannapolis, is not only distorting the truth, but telling outright lies in its campaign to discredit him. The N.C. GOP has mailed at least four fliers to voters in the 90th District — which includes Kannapolis and Concord — during the past two weeks. Three of the glossy fliers accuse Sossamon of voting to “raid” the state’s Medicaid reserve fund for $70 million to pay for “pet projects” like studies of turf grass and ocean crabs. One mailing shows a stack of $20 bills being passed from one hand to another, with an arrow pointing to Sossamon's picture, indicating the money will be passed to him. Inside, the text begins, “Leonard Sossamon raided the Medicaid Trust Fund. You just can’t trust Leonard Sossamon.” The bill the flier refers to as its source is House Bill 1840, the appropriations portion of this year’s budget. Sossamon scoffs at the idea that he’s being attacked for voting for the budget.

Republicans voted in favor of the budget as well and are running for re-election touting it as an achievement, he said. Notably among them, Sossamon said, is Rep. Charlotte Gardner of Rowan County. “Charlotte voted for that, and I did too; so did Sen. Fletcher Hartsell (of Cabarrus County), who is a Republican,” he said. “I think it’s strange that, in my case, they’re trying to beat me up about it, and in other cases they’re running positive ads about it.”

In fact, the N.C. Democratic Party has done the same thing. It mailed a flier praising Sossamon for voting for increased teacher pay and help for seniors who can’t afford prescription drugs, citing the same budget bill. The General Assembly did move $70 million from the Medicaid reserve fund to the regular 1999 Medicaid fund to pay for current expenses. That money replaced $70 million in the regular Medicaid fund that was then returned to the general fund and became part of the state’s $18 billion budget.

The money could conceivably have been used to pay for the studies the GOP refers to, but since it became part of the state’s larger general-fund pot, it’s hard to track specific dollars. The reserve fund was established to contain federal money put into the Medicaid system to help reimburse hospitals for their care of Medicaid patients, said a fiscal analyst familiar with state government. When the federal government overpays, the money is placed in the reserve, or trust account. Eventually the state must settle up with the federal government on overpayments. But Medicaid is an entitlement program, meaning anyone who meets the criteria set for receiving it cannot be turned down, Sossamon said. “I think what they’re trying to do is confuse seniors,” Sossamon said.

Dan Gurley, political director for the N.C. GOP, admits that Republicans as well as Democrats voted in favor of the budget containing the transfer of funds. “There are a lot of bills that come out of the General Assembly that are not party-line votes,” Gurley said. “In this instance, we believed this was a bad vote for residents of the 90th House District.” Gurley said the 90th District seat is a “top tier” race for Republicans, who need to win seven seats in November to regain control of the House. It is an attractive race for several reasons, he said, including the fact that Sossamon was appointed to replace Richard Moore, who stepped down in May after pleading guilty to several felonies. “With him being appointed to the seat, there was not a long legislative record,” Gurley said. “We had to look at the votes he cast while in office.” Gurley said the Republican party’s research indicated the Medicaid issue “played very well for us, that it was important to voters in the district and it was a strong issue for Republicans to put forward.”

The fliers say they are not endorsed by a candidate. And Johnson, the Republican running for the seat, said she couldn’t comment specifically on them since she didn’t give them her blessing. But she said she opposes the “creative accounting” of shifting money among funds. A similar move, she said, left a hole in the ABCs fund for teacher bonuses that the state may be unable to fill next year. “I think you ought to balance the budget, and I think you ought to not leave holes for the next year,” she said. Johnson said she has received no direct financial support from the state GOP. It has sent out a flier on her behalf, saying that she’ll support a prescription drug plan for needy seniors.

The N.C. Democratic Party has mailed at least two other fliers praising Sossamon — one saying he’ll stand up to HMOs for better health care and one saying he’ll protect private information from telemarketers. The Republican party mailed at least one flier departing from the Medicaid issue. That one accuses Sossamon of voting to raise taxes on gas and electricity, but doesn’t cite a specific bill. Sossamon denies the charge. “They really screwed up this time, because that was voted on before I was ever in the House of Representatives,” he said.

Sossamon, Johnson Set Their Sights on 90th District Seat

Author: Scott Jenkins

Democrat Leonard Sossamon Jr. and Republican Linda Johnson square off Nov. 7 in a race that has gotten more publicity for who is not in it than who is. Richard Moore, a popular and rising young Democrat from Kannapolis, announced early this year that he would not seek a third term in the 90th N.C. House District. The announcement came amid allegations that the former A.L. Brown High School teacher committed sex-related crimes with former students. Moore left the Legislature in May after pleading guilty to three charges. The Cabarrus County Democratic Party nominated Sossamon to finish Moore's term, a natural move since Sossamon had won the Democratic primary only weeks earlier.

Johnson, a former member of the Kannapolis Board of Education, which accepted Moore's resignation from A.L. Brown, defeated Jim Gulley Jr. in the GOP primary. Gulley came up short against Moore in 1998 in one of the most expensive House races in the state. Now Sossamon — with a short session, some co-sponsored bills and several House votes under his belt — and Johnson have set their sights on the future, and the issues facing the state and the 90th District, which includes Kannapolis and Concord. The issues include nagging problems like road construction and maintenance, in which the state seems lagging locally. Other issues are populist rallying cries, like improving education. Still others are touchy subjects, like a state lottery, which some legislators — and both candidates — prefer to put to a vote of the people.

While they agree on a lottery referendum, the two disagree on other issues. Sossamon said he'd consider a moratorium on state executions to allow death-row inmates access to new technologies, like DNA testing. Johnson opposes such a moratorium, saying it would deny victims of crime the justice they and their families deserve.

Leonard Sossamon Jr.

Sossamon, 50, of 830 Courtney St. S.E. in Concord, calls himself a "bona fide newcomer." Though he spent several months this spring in Moore's old chair in Raleigh, Sossamon has never won public office or run a full race for one. He worked 13 years as Concord city manager and five years before that as the city planning director. He resigned in 1998 to become a founding partner in Hunter & Brown, a Concord real estate development company. A self-described fiscal conservative, Sossamon said he ran the city like a business, and the way he conducted business led some local residents to express surprise when he registered as a Democrat last spring. After he resigned, council members praised Sossamon for his work in aggressively pursuing new economic prospects, including Concord Mills, and pushing Concord Regional Airport.

Sossamon entered the Concord City Council race last year but withdrew, citing potential business conflicts. He said running in the 90th District is an extension of the work he did in the public sector for more than two decades. And Sossamon cited that experience as evidence that he's more qualified for the job than Johnson. "I think I've got more experience dealing with large budgets and larger personnel issues," he said. "I think (voters) should consider that as an issue. They should look at my track record as opposed to hers, and they would vote for me." He also pointed out that he and Johnson part ways on a proposal that she supported while on the school board, giving local boards of education taxing authority. County commissioners provide school systems with funds now.

Johnson said that if school boards are going to be held accountable for education, they ought to have the authority to go along with that responsibility. Sossamon disagrees. "I'm not for giving another unit of government taxation authority," he said. "I think that's a slippery slope, and once we embark on it, who knows where it stops?" Sossamon said he believes the state can improve education by reducing class sizes, continuing to increase teachers' salaries and accountability and considering ways to help counties build schools, such as a redistribution of sales taxes. Supporting education means improving not only the public school system but the state's community colleges as well, he said. He supports the $3.1 billion bond package that voters will decide on this fall. Another matter Sossamon said is best left to a referendum is a lottery, which proponents say could generate a great deal of money for public education.

During his brief stint in Raleigh, Sossamon served on the House Transportation Committee. Improving local roads is one of his priorities. Like most elected representatives and candidates from this area, where study after study finds the roads are worse than those in the east, Sossamon said the state's current funding formula isn't fair. He hopes to help change it. If voters send him to Raleigh, Sossamon said he'd try again to push through an expansion of the Homestead Exemption Act, a tax bill to benefit seniors that failed to pass in the short session, and look for ways the state can help seniors defray health-care costs.

Linda Johnson

Johnson, 55, of 1205 Berkshire Drive, Kannapolis, is a self-employed computer analyst and tax accountant who served eight years on the Kannapolis Board of Education. She's proud of her involvement in building A.L. Brown High School's Cyber Campus with money donated by businesses — and no taxpayer involvement — and creating a foundation to keep the Cyber Campus going. Johnson also highlights her involvement in rewriting system policy, which occurred during her first year on the board, and her work to teach abstinence in sex-education classes. The system made gains in academics and safety all eight years of her tenure, she said.

Though she's held no other elected offices, Johnson served six years as an appointed member of the Cabarrus County Parks and Recreation Commission, where she helped create a foundation to provide money for parks services during years when the county budget can't pay for them all. She also helped develop a plan for school recreation facilities to be used as public parks. "That's a double use of the tax dollar," she said. "I've been really proud of that." Johnson also has served on the boards of Head Start and Communities in Schools and was a founder of the Kannapolis Dixie Youth Baseball League. "I've been an activist for the community for 30 years, and I've always tried to solve the community's problems with common sense and concern for individuals," she said. "And I'd like to do that in Raleigh."

She has worked in Raleigh as an unpaid lobbyist for the N.C. School Boards Association and on behalf of local education needs, she said. She describes herself as conservative and said her background in accounting would help her analyze the state's budget and ensure that it's "really balanced, not just transferred from account to account, leaving a hole for next year."

Johnson said she has served as an elected official and not, like her opponent, as a government employee. That gives her an advantage, she said, because she knows what it is to seek and do the will of the people. "I believe representation is truly getting the wants and the desires and the needs of the community met at the local level, making sure the voices of the businesses, the community, the individuals are heard in Raleigh," she said. Johnson agrees with Sossamon that those voices should be heard on the question of a state lottery, though she calls it a "quick fix" and fears it would allow the Legislature to divert current education funding elsewhere in the budget.

To improve education, Johnson supports the continued use and refining of the ABCs of Education accountability program, more focus on campus safety and an increase in the numbers of teacher assistants and school nurses. Johnson said she'd like to see the state spend more money on education. She said it could, without raising taxes, find the money to live up to its 1931 pact with counties to pay expenses for county-built schools. Right now, about 25 percent of the Kannapolis system's budget pays utility bills, she said. "I believe in the taxpayers' money going to schools to help solve a lot of problems," she said. "I think it's an important time to have an education representative in Raleigh." On transportation, Johnson agrees with Sossamon that the main culprit in Cabarrus County's road woes is the uneven way Raleigh distributes money. The problem won't be solved, she said, until Cabarrus gains more political clout in Raleigh and forces the state to face the issue.

Downtown Champions

Author: Nancy Riley

Gov. Jim Hunt announced three Champions of Concord Downtown during an event Wednesday in New Bern celebrating the 20th anniversary of the N.C. Main Street program.

John M. Barnhardt was the first board president of Concord Downtown Development Corp., then known as the Concord Downtown Redevelopment Corp. He encouraged citizens and government officials to support the revitalization of Concord's central business district. He currently is president of the board of trustees for Historic Concord Preservation Trust.

Randy Baucom is an innovative business owner, according to the presentation. Recognizing the need for more downtown parking and the need for a temporary solution for his customers, Baucom advertises "valet parking" for his customers. In bad weather, Baucom will pick up cars parked down the street and pull them in front of the business while customers load themselves and their packages into their cars.

Leonard B. Sossaman was city manager of Concord for more than a 10 years. Born and raised in Cabarrus County, Sossaman was a city manager in several N.C. cities before he returned to Concord. He began his work for Concord as its city planner. Sossaman's foresight encouraged elected officials to support and pay for the downtown revitalization program in the area of Concord where the city began in 1796.

Sossamon Named to Fill Cabarrus Seat in Legislature

Author: Courtney St. Onge

Cabarrus County Democrats unanimously recommended former Concord City Manager Leonard Sossamon to fill the N.C. House District 90 seat left open by Richard Moore's resignation last week. The district executive committee voted 22-0 on Tuesday to have Sossamon go to Raleigh and finish Moore's term. Sossamon likely will be sworn in today after Gov. Jim Hunt affirms the recommendation. "I really do appreciate the opportunity," Sossamon said. "It really is a strong vote of confidence from the people." Sossamon was the logical choice; he won the Democratic nomination for the seat earlier this month. Both of his opponents in the primary, Richard Anderson and Wayne Troutman, supported his appointment.

In November, Sossamon will run against Kannapolis school board member Linda P. Johnson, who won the Republican primary. Moore, 29, was the youngest member of the N.C. House and a rising star in the state Democratic Party before allegations of misconduct surfaced last summer. Moore, a one-time A.L. Brown High School teacher, was accused of inappropriate behavior with former male students. He resigned his seat in the General Assembly on May 7, on the eve of its short session. Later that week, he pleaded guilty to one felony count of crime against nature and two misdemeanor counts of attempted crime against nature.

The Cabarrus County Democratic Party executive committee met May 7 to hear Moore's resignation, but party officials agreed to wait until Tuesday to choose a replacement. County party Chairman John Clark said they wanted to vote when all precincts were represented. He said it was important to get someone to the legislature to represent District 90 as soon as possible. Clark said he hopes that having Sossamon run as an incumbent will help the Democrats' chances in November. "The conventional wisdom is that being an incumbent helps," he said. "If we can get him there now, it could."

Concord Manager to Resign

Author: Scott Verner

The city manager who has led Concord through one of the most aggressive periods of growth and change in its history announced Friday he will resign in April. Leonard Sossamon told the city council he would leave April 10 after 13 years as city manager to go into the real estate development business. Sossamon, 47, a city administrator for 18 years, most recently helped shepherd the land deals for the 1,800-acre Kings Grant development. That project includes the 1.4 million-square-foot Concord Mills regional outlet mall, another outlet mall and plans for a city convention center/hotel complex.

Ground breaking is set for Wednesday on the Concord Mills mall at Kings Grant, which Mayor George Liles cited as Sossamon's crowning achievement. "He's been a real genius in getting that done," Liles said. "There's been some criticism about the city getting into the real estate business, but we needed to do it to get things started out there (at Kings Grant). Now we're going to have a full-service hotel and convention center there, and we'll be out of the real estate business."

Sossamon worked to expand and improve the city's and Cabarrus County's water system, including construction of a new reservoir on Coddle Creek and a water treatment plant nearby. He also has led efforts to develop industrial parks and establish tax incentives that helped the city recruit several major industries; build and expand a new city airport; develop a city golf club; and build new low-income and affordable housing. "Everything that's made this city progressive has been under his regime. All the good things that have happened, and the progress going on here, he's been the one that implemented it all," Liles said. "We think of things to do, he tells us how to get it done." Sossamon will continue to live in Cabarrus County, Liles said. Attempts to reach the city manager Friday were unsuccessful.

Liles said he has appointed himself and council members Lamar Barrier, Alfred Brown and Scott Padgett to a search committee to find a new city manager. "It could take months, and it probably will," Liles said. No interim manager has been named yet, he said. Sossamon, a Cabarrus County native and a 1968 graduate of Mount Pleasant High School, was hired as the city's planning director in 1980. He replaced G.L. Greenson as city manager in 1985. "Leonard is the type that when he goes after something, he goes after it 110 percent," said Barrier, who is in his fourth four-year term on the city council. "He's been a big help to me over the past 12 years. . . . He's done an excellent job. I'll miss him."

Chamber Seeks Inspiration in Cabarrus

Author: Gail Smith

Next to a table offering cheese Danish and imported gourmet coffee, Union County officials chatted about what they hoped to gain from their trip to Cabarrus County: Ideas on how Union could duplicate some of Cabarrus' recent economic success. On Wednesday, more than 30 Union Chamber of Commerce officials went to Concord for their 1997 intercounty visit - ready to hear about economic development incentives, governmental cooperation and tourism promotion. "Cabarrus County has done a great job of putting their act together," said Frank Carpenter, chairman of the Union chamber. "Cabarrus is a model for us with very similar opportunities," said Jim Carpenter, the Union chamber president. He's not related to the chairman.

Cabarrus and Union are similar in size and face the same growth issues, such as school overcrowding and industrial recruitment. Union's population is about 104,000; Cabarrus has about 120,000. Jim Carpenter admitted that Cabarrus, a prime competitor for industry, has "a leg up" on Union with its road systems and proximity to University Research Park and UNC Charlotte. Recently Cabarrus has pulled off some regional coups, including landing Sysco's new Charlotte area headquarters, Corning Inc.'s $300 million optical fiber plant under construction in Midland and the planned 1.5 million-square-foot Concord Mills mall at the Cabarrus/Mecklenburg line. Cabarrus and the city of Concord created its tax-rebate packages for industrial and retail projects as incentives to balance residential growth with more commercial development, Cabarrus County Manager Frank Clifton told the Union officials.

Clifton and Concord City Manager Leonard Sossamon both cited cooperation between the county and other local governing boards as key to recruiting success. And they said it's important to have strong leaders with broad vision serving on city and county boards, not people with narrow agendas. And access to an interstate highway is important, but it's not the make-or-break advantage, Clifton told the group. "Corning located in south Cabarrus County, almost as far away from the interstate as you can get," Clifton said. Union County should focus on what it can offer, he said - not what it can't. Bob Smith, elected Tuesday night to the Monroe City Council, said one of the main things he learned from the Cabarrus trip was the need to balance residential and industrial growth. And Smith, also a former Monroe school board chairman, said Union County may need to consider a room/hotel tax, which Cabarrus has, to bring in revenue for its tourism industry.

Concord Road Tax Proposed

Author: Gail Smith

Concord's roads are getting more congested by the day, and City Manager Leonard Sossamon said the city should raise taxes to do something about it. He proposed Thursday a 2-cent increase to bring in up to $630,000 to improve intersections and add traffic signals and turn lanes. "That's not going to create a situation where all the ills will be cured, but at least it's a start," Sossamon said of the roads money. The current city tax rate is 44 cents per $100 in assessed valuation. The proposed increase would raise city taxes $24 on a home assessed at $120,000.

Mayor George Liles said that Concord has a "terrible traffic problem" and that residents want the city to do something. "People are really concerned about it," he said. Liles and City Council members said the city, with the $630,000 in hand, could get projects done more quickly - perhaps in combination with state road money. Council member Scott Padgett said the city has serious traffic problems, but said it's too early to tell whether he's ready to support a tax increase for roads.

Local traffic planners have said many of the city's two-lane roads don't have the capacity to handle the heavier traffic load, including tractor-trailers that need more room for wider turns. Sossamon mentioned U.S. 29, N.C. 73, Poplar Tent Road and N.C. 136 as troubled roads. The proposed operating budget is slightly more than $25 million, a 3.7 percent increase over the current budget. Also included in the proposed budget is a 10 percent increase in city sewer rates, increased fees for services such as planning and zoning permits and maps, and a 401(k) investment savings plan for city employees. The public is invited to a hearing on the budget at 7 p.m. June 2, in the council meeting room at the city municipal building, 26 Union Street South. The budget is available at the clerk's office in the municipal building.

Barber-Scotia College to Pay $55,419 Utility Bill Gradually Deferment Plan Keeps City from Cutting Off Service

Author: Jim Wrinn

In its struggle to stay open, Barber-Scotia College cleared a major hurdle Monday. Minutes before Concord city offices closed at 5 p.m., college President Asa Spaulding called City Manager Leonard Sossamon to accept the city's offer to accept gradual payment of a $55,419 utility bill. If the offer had not been accepted, crews today would have cut off water, sewer and electric service to college offices, classrooms and dormitories. That would have shut down the college and displaced hundreds of students from dorms and from apartments rented by the school. The buildings would have been considered uninhabitable under city code, Sossamon said. The agreement calls for the financially troubled college to pay at least $15,000 of its utility bill by noon Thursday, another $15,000 by noon April 15 and the balance - $25,419 - by noon April 29. Of the school's utility bill, $25,752.31 is overdue, Sossamon said. The rest of the bill is not yet past due, he said.

Efforts to reach Spaulding and Charlotte Hornets owner George Shinn, who is chairman of the school's board of trustees, were unsuccessful Monday. Before talking with Spaulding late Monday, Sossamon said the city did not want to cut off the school's utilities but would have no choice. The next hurdle the school faces this week is its payroll of about $400,000, due to faculty and staff members Friday, a source close to the college has said. The school also owes more than $100,000 to the company that provides its food service, sources say. Dr. Joel Nwagbaroacha resigned earlier this month as president of the historically black liberal arts college, amid reports of financial mismanagement and news the school was more than $1 million in debt. Spaulding, then trustees chairman, was named the new president.

Shinn was named to replace Spaulding as trustees chairman, and he pledged $1 million to the school. But Shinn said Friday the money would not be forthcoming unless the school developed a business plan to get out of debt. On Monday, employees of Shinn were seen at the school, apparently signaling that Shinn's help is on the way, a source said. Last week Nwagbaroacha challenged the way his resignation was handled, saying Shinn and Spaulding "usurped the authority" of the board. Some students said they rejected Shinn's help and Spaulding's leadership. But on Monday, students started coming forward with appreciation. "I'm grateful for anything George Shinn can do to help us," said junior Greg Miller of Charlotte. "I feel like we're in a financial slump right now, but only positive things can happen from here on."

LEGAL WALL PUT AROUND SPEEDWAY LANDFILL

Author: Lisa Pierce

Concord officials were outraged Monday at tentative action by the Cabarrus County commissioners to prevent the city from using a 292-acre landfill it approved only two weeks ago. ``The Cabarrus County commissioners have taken the Iraqi approach to government in Cabarrus County,`` said Concord City Manager Leonard Sossamon. ``While Saddam Hussein is holding Kuwait hostage, it appears that the commissioners are trying to do the same thing to Concord.``

Sossamon said the city would consider suing to stop the county`s action, which effectively would prevent Concord from using a planned new landfill at the Charlotte Motor Speedway that has been a focus of controversy for months.

In a 3-2 vote after a two-hour closed meeting, the commissioners approved the first reading of an amendment that would make it illegal to take solid waste generated in Cabarrus County to any landfill other than Cabarrus

County`s public landfill.

The amendment to the county`s solid-waste ordinance will have its second reading Monday at the commissioners` regular meeting. It will become official if adopted at that reading. Commissioners William Hamby, Martha Melvin and Bill Simmons voted for the amendment. Chairman Jim Lentz and Giles Moss voted against it. ``I don`t know how they think they can do that without going through

Raleigh`` for state legislation, said Concord Mayor Bernie Edwards. ``I question the legality of it,`` said H.A. ``Humpy`` Wheeler, president and general manager of the speedway. ``And in a time when the city and county need to be working together mutually to keep the tax rate down, this is a very profound development that, if it is legal, could cost the taxpayers of Concord upwards to $15 million over a period of time.``

Hamby said the amendment was intended to keep the county from losing an estimated $600,000 a year that Concord pays to use the county landfill. Without the revenue from the city, the county may not be able to pay for its new recycling program and other state-mandated programs, Hamby said.

The Concord Board of Aldermen approved the speedway landfill July 31 over the objections of hundreds of nearby residents, who said the facility would cause environmental problems and hurt property values. The landfill, an expansion of a currently operating facility, is planned for a site on the east bank of the Rocky River, just across Pitts School Road from three large residential subdivisions. At the same time, the city accepted an offer by developers Browning-Ferris Industries Inc. and its subsidiary, CMS Development Corp., to accept Concord's garbage free for the 15-year life of the landfill - saving the city an estimated $6 million to $8 million in fees at the county landfill.

Hamby denied the amendment was a direct response to Concord's decision. But Lentz said, "I think it's a little bit of a knee-jerk reaction" to the Concord Board of Aldermen's decision. "Lots of investigation work needs to take place," Lentz said. He suggested the county could save money by using the speedway landfill, if the county could obtain a guaranteed rate of $2.50 per cubic yard for the next 15 years. Wheeler said he met Thursday with officials of Browning-Ferris, CMS Development and the county.

"We told them then that we understood the problems of a loss of revenue, but we thought we could assist them," he said. "And after informing them of that, we sent a letter to (County Manager) Mike Ruffin Friday and suggested a meeting between BFI and the county manager's office to see if we could assist them in their plight. "I didn't know they were going to do this tonight. I think it was a knee jerk reaction to put pressure on the City of Concord. But I think they're treading a very narrow legal line." Hamby predicted the speedway landfill wouldn't be able to maintain charges of $2.50 per cubic yard. "The cost of solid waste management will increase, regardless of where.

State requirements will guarantee that prices will go up everywhere," Hamby said. Violators of the amended ordinance could be fined up to $3,000 a day. The amendment wouldn't apply to garbage coming into the speedway landfill from outside Cabarrus County.

Most of the garbage dumped at the speedway's current landfill, as well as what's planned for the new one, is from Mecklenburg County.

CONCORD HOLDS LINE ON TAXES IN '90-'91 BUDGET

Author: Edited by Ben Perkowski

There will be no tax increase in Concord next year, City Manager Leonard Sossamon said Thursday night at a meeting of the Concord Board of Aldermen. "For seven years, we have maintained a tax rate of 47 cents for a $100 evaluation, and I can recommend the 1990-91 fiscal year budget without recommending a tax increase," Sossamon said.

No action was taken on the budget, and sessions will be set up for its review.

Healing Hugo's Scars

Author: Jim Wrinn & Scott Verner

Six months ago this morning, Cabarrus County residents cowered in their homes as the predawn fury of Hurricane Hugo raged around them. Later they emerged from their homes to find downed trees, broken power lines, debris and property damage everywhere. Falling trees smashed some people's homes or cars. Other people suffered no more than overturned trash cans or torn-off shingles.

Today, six months after the storm, most of the highly visible effects of the Sept. 22 hurricane have faded. But the scars of Hurricane Hugo remain embedded in Cabarrus County, and recovery is still taking place. In fact, the Cabarrus chapter of the American Red Cross only last week wrapped up its relief work. "We were just last week finishing up our last case," said executive director Carol Venzlaff. "So it's taken us six months to get to this point. "One house almost had to be renovated from the ground up," Venzlaff said. The house needed a new roof, new interior walls, new plumbing and electrical systems and much more, she said. "The bills haven't been paid yet, but the work is done," Venzlaff said. Part of the cost will be reimbursed with a grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency. And a group of 10 Mennonites volunteered the labor, staying three weeks. The Red Cross paid their room, board and expenses until they left Cabarrus County about two weeks ago, Venzlaff said. Now the Red Cross is busy preparing and recruiting volunteers to help with disasters that may occur here as a result of tornadoes or fires that could be worsened by remaining hurricane damage.

Venzlaff said about 25 trained volunteers are needed. A basic disaster training course will be offered April 28, she said. The storm's mighty fist fell hard on Concord's electrical system, which serves 15,000 customers in and around Concord. Officials say 99 percent of service was interrupted. Repair work began the day of the storm, has gone on for half a year and now could stretch out as long as another six months. "We still have a number of areas where there were poles and power lines rebuilt or restored just the easiest, quickest and safest way at the time to get power back on," said Steve Slough, Concord's director of public utilities. "What was done was to put on a Band-Aid; now we're going back and taking the Band-Aid off and making a permanent fix." A contract crew that has been helping the city restore its power system will continue to work for about another four to six weeks, Slough said. "We're still putting our electrical services back to a permanent status," said City Manager Leonard Sossamon. "Our system was in really good shape before Hugo. It's taking us a long time to go back and make sure we've got everything put back together."

City Saves Some Money

Although the repair work is continuing, the city expects to come out slightly better than expected on the dollars it will have to plunk down. "We originally were talking between $4 million and $4.5 million," Sossamon said. "One (electrical) substation was knocked out on N.C. 73 East,

Internet – Newspaper Archives Searches
Leonard B. Sossamon
(Articles are in reverse chronological order)

and we thought we were going to have to replace it.” That might have cost $1 million, but was repaired for about $100,000, he said. Sossamon now estimates costs to the city of between $3 million and $3.5 million from the hurricane. So far Concord has received $1.5 million in disaster aid reimbursements from the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Sossamon said he expects to file a claim this spring to FEMA for another $500,000.

Kannapolis, which does not own its own electrical system, finished its Hugo cleanup in December and put the price of the effort at $267,331, almost double what it originally anticipated. The city has received $113,073 in reimbursements from FEMA. “We expect to receive the other part,” said City Manager Gene McCombs. “Our biggest unexpected thing was the amount of debris. At first we estimated our cleanup at $150,000, but it just kept coming. People kept bringing more stuff out, and we had to keep revising our estimates upward.”

Some Damage Was Hidden

Some Hugo damage wasn’t fully apparent until weeks or months after the hurricane passed. The band building at A.L. Brown High School in Kannapolis, for example, had shingles torn off and hurled back into the roof of the building. The support framework wasn’t damaged, but the embedded shingles made the roof susceptible to leaks, enough to prompt officials to replace it. “We knew it had happened, but we didn’t know how bad it was until we looked at the roof close up in January,” said Ernest Macon, assistant superintendent of the Kannapolis City Schools, who is in charge of buildings. This summer, Macon said, the roof will be replaced. “The solutions for many of the Hugo situations are coming long after the hurricane,” he said. The roof at Jackson Park Elementary School in Kannapolis, however, will meet a different fate. A recent decision to build a new classroom building means temporary roof repairs won’t be made permanent.

No Sign Of Leaks

Some things that were devastated by the hurricane, however, have been renewed with no lasting effects. It is amazing to Neil Shouse, principal at Mount Pleasant Middle School, that the second-floor classrooms now show no effects where roof damage allowed water to pour in. “It’s just like there never was a problem,” he said. Immediately after the hurricane, school maintenance workers built plywood sluices to channel the water out. The months haven’t dulled his images of the people who helped, said Slough, the Concord utilities director. “I just have to praise the dedication of the men who worked day in and day out for 12 to 15 days immediately following the storm, and the people who responded, the people who gave the crews food, the overwhelming community response,” he said.

Concord, Fieldcrest Make Pact
Company has 2 Years to Reduce Pollutants
Author: Laurie Willis

The Concord Board of Aldermen on Monday unanimously approved an agreement with Fieldcrest Cannon specifying deadlines for reducing the pollutants the company discharges into the city's wastewater treatment plant. "The agreement sets up deadlines for certain improvements to be made by Fieldcrest Cannon and if they aren't made, certain action by the city can and will be taken," said Steve Slough, public utilities director. "We've sat down and discussed it with them, and they've agreed." Slough said the company has been discharging for several years excessive pollutants into the city's Rocky River Regional Wastewater Treatment Plant. "The agreement outlines a series of benchmarks they'll work toward achieving," City Manager Leonard Sossamon said.

The agreement gives Fieldcrest Cannon about two years to comply, Sossamon said. Their first deadline is sometime in January 1990. Penalties will also be higher if the deadlines aren't met. Among changes the board has approved in its Water Sewer Ordinance is an increase in fees for violations from $50 to $1,000. Also Monday, the board approved an agreement with the county authorizing the two governments to cooperate in areas where each offers services to cut off those services for customers who don't pay their bills. For example, if the city provides water service and the county has sewer service and a customer refuses to pay his sewer bill, the county can cut off that customer's water even if that bill is currently paid, Slough said. The agreement will be used as a last resort and is designed to ensure both governments get paid, Sossamon said.

Concord Balances its Budget
City Manager Expects No Increase in Taxes
Author: Ted DeAdwyler

For the seventh year in a row, Concord residents will pay 47 cents per $100 of valuation under the recommended 1989-90 city budget released Monday. ``You can't beat that - a budget without a tax increase,`` said alderman Frank Dusch. City Manager Leonard Sossamon credited the aldermen and city officials for the stable tax rate. ``It happened due to good and solid directions and policies established by the board of aldermen. It happened due to superior administration, sound fiscal management and astute operations by the city's management and staff,`` said Sossamon. The city's proposed general fund budget totals $12.9 million, up from the current budget of $11.7 million.

In addition, the proposed budget includes $22.2 million to provide electric service for city customers, $4.2 million to operate the Rocky River Waste Treatment Plant, $3.7 million to run the sewer system and $3.2 million to operate the water system. The proposed general fund budget includes $323,000 to begin the second phase of the downtown ``Streetscape`` project by continuing sidewalk renovations on Union Street and adding decorative lighting and traffic signals on Church Street. Another $176,000 would be used to pave 13,000 feet of dirt streets formerly maintained by the state but recently taken over by the city.

In addition, the budget adds several employees to the utility department to conduct water and sewer line inspections and gives all city employees a 5 percent pay raise. To balance the budget without raising the tax rate, the city would use $549,000 of its $5.3 million undesignated fund balance or savings account. ``I think we have to give credit to the staff and Leonard (Sossamon) because this budget is a job well done,`` said Mayor Bernie Edwards.

Officials Swap Notes at Conference

Author: Ted DeAdwyler

While in Washington for several days last week, county commissioner William Hamby got a chance to look into an issue Cabarrus County will soon face. What can be done with solid waste as the county landfill reaches capacity? "I had an interesting conversation with county officials from the Memphis area who were dealing with tons of garbage. Their answer was incineration. I don't know if it will work here, but it is worth looking into," he said.

The conversation was an example why Hamby and other county officials who were in Washington say they find the trip a valuable part of improving county services. "It is always good to talk with other county officials and compare notes," said Giles Moss, who has gone to several of the gatherings. Five Cabarrus County commissioners and two county officials - County Manager Mike Ruffin and Finance Director Blair Bennett - last week attended the National Association of Counties (NACO) annual legislative conference at the Washington Hilton. The conference - at which speakers included Vice President Dan Quayle - attracted about 2,000 county officials from around the county.

And now that county officials have returned from the nation's capital, city officials from Cabarrus County are scheduled to be in Washington through Tuesday for the legislative conference of the National League of Cities. From Concord, City Manager Leonard Sossamon, City Attorney Gordon Belo, mayor pro tem Jim Dorton and alderman Laine Harling are scheduled to attend. And from Kannapolis, Mayor Bachman Brown, mayor pro tem Harold Holbrook and council member Ken Geathers are scheduled to go.

Sossamon said the gathering, also held at the Washington Hilton, will help the city prepare for federal legislation. The city manager said he was especially concerned about environmental and housing issues. "I understand there is some proposed legislation that might force cities to monitor discharges into drainage basins, and that could be quite costly," he said. Sossamon said he also wants to know more about how the federal government will provide housing assistance - either through subsidies or new construction. "We want to see what type of housing help we can expect for our citizens," he said.

Harling, who also wants to focus on environmental concerns, said the trip will give city officials a different perspective. "We will find out how the city relates to the rest of the country. And we can also see what direction the federal government is headed. You need time to take a broader look at things," he said. Usually there are some light moments on the trip, too. Several county officials, for example, traveled to Landover, Md., to watch the Charlotte Hornets play the Washington Bullets. They weren't alone. Members of other North Carolina delegations also were in the audience, they said.

Taxpayers in Concord and Cabarrus County might be able to take a sigh of relief following release of city and county budgets. Those documents do not show a tax increase. Kannapolis residents, however, face a 5-cent hike, to 25 cents per $100 valuation, according to the city's budget released last week. And, if voters approve on June 3 the merger of the City of Kannapolis with the Kannapolis and Royal Oaks sanitary districts, the city will require a 30 cents per $100 valuation tax rate, but the 15 cents per $100 sanitary district tax will be dropped. The budgets undergo scrutiny by elected officials before the documents take effect July 1.

Concord officials say they are proud to keep the tax rate at 47 cents. "It feels good to offer the same level of services at the same tax rate," said Cathy Combs, the city's director of finance. "I think it speaks well of the fine work and efficiency of our department heads."

A tax increase in Concord was avoided in part because of a growing tax base, accelerated by the city's annexation of 8.06 square miles. Come June 30, Concord will annex land along its western and southern borders, increasing the city's size from 11.51 square miles to 19.57. The population will grow from 18,465 to 26,149. The boundaries of the city will stretch to the Winecoff School area to U.S. 29 and N.C. 49 to take in three Cannon Mills plants, mill villages, subdivisions, S&D Coffee Inc. and Philip Morris, USA. In preparation for annexation, the city is adding nearly 70 workers to its 239-person work force. Joining the city will be 25 firefighters, 12 police officers and 30 public works employees.

As a result of annexation, the city budget grows to $11.5 million for the upcoming 1986-87 fiscal year from $8.3 million for the current 1985-86 year. However, money from Washington will not increase. "Unfortunately, the news about revenue is not all good," city manager Leonard Sossamon said in his budget message. "Due to federal budget cuts, revenue from the federal government is projected to be much less than in previous years." The city received $225,000 in federal revenue sharing money this year compared with $47,000 projected for next year. For Cabarrus County government, the tax rate remains at 52 cents per $100 valuation.

County manager Charles McGinnis says he avoided a tax increase because of the county's good financial standing. "We have been working to build our financial structure," said McGinnis. "We wanted to get our house in order to have some latitude in financing." To support the budget, officials used $2.9 million from the county's fund balance. County commissioners have pledged to hold the line on taxes. The county's proposed $29.9 million operating budget for the 1986-87 fiscal year is an increase over the current year's budget of $27.8 million. Cabarrus County Schools would receive $5.4 million for operating costs, compared with $5 million this year. The schools had asked for $5.7 million.

Tina Loving, chairman of the school board, said that if the budget is approved unchanged, the school board will have to reassess priorities. In Kannapolis, council members will tackle the city's $4.4 million budget during a June 9 work session. The proposed budget represents a 15 percent increase over this year's $3.8 million budget. According to city manager Gene McCombs, much of the proposed budget increase would come from grant money the city anticipates during the coming year.

Diaper Collection Controversy Pits Mother Against City

Author: Ted DeAdwyler

Who says you can't fight City Hall? A Concord woman is giving it a try. In a dispute over whether the garbage collectors will take away disposable diapers, Sandy Feibelman-Coppola, mother of two, has temporarily triumphed. "I think we won the war," said the Beverly Drive resident, after city workers picked up her garbage and children's diapers late last week. The city, however, will have the final word. "To prevent any inconvenience, we decided to continue pickups, but we haven't changed our policy," city manager Leonard Sossamon said Thursday.

The disagreement started a week and a half ago when a supervisor with Concord's public works department came to Coppola's door. Coppola said she was told her family's garbage would not be picked up unless the disposable diapers were put in a separate bag and placed on the curb for curbside pickup once a week, on Fridays. "My reaction was that I pay city taxes and I assume that my garbage will be picked up," said Coppola. She and her husband have a 2-year-old son, Chris, and a 3-month-old daughter, Laura. Later that afternoon, she went to City Hall to get a copy of the city's garbage collection ordinance and talk with officials at the public works department. Still unappeased, Coppola called city manager Leonard Sossamon, who told her he would look into the matter.

The next day, just as the public works supervisor warned, city garbage collectors did not remove her garbage. "They picked up the bag of garbage, looked at it and then put it back in the container," said Coppola, who says she rinses, rewraps and tapes diapers before placing them in a plastic bag for disposal. She then got back on the phone. After talking with Sossamon and city attorney Gordon Belo, Coppola said the two told her the city's policy was not to collect diapers along with garbage. The county landfill accepts disposable diapers. But city garbage collectors don't take human waste in backyard collections because of the tendency of plastic bags to burst as they are compressed in a garbage truck compactor, said a public works official. She said she was told the policy calls for pickup of disposable diapers in plastic bags along with household trash from curbside each week.

Coppola didn't think that was a good idea. "I think it would lead to an unsanitary condition," said the 31-year-old mother, whose family moved to Concord last year from Charlotte. "When it is hot and humid, the situation would be intolerable." In addition, neighbors with small children in disposable diapers had no problems with garbage collection, contended Coppola, who says her children go through 100 diapers a week. "It seemed as though I was being singled out," she said.

Next, Sossamon paid a visit to the Coppola home to inspect the disposable diaper garbage, but didn't give Coppola any assurance the garbage would be picked up from the plastic container by city workers next time. With diapers piling up, she then began to turn on the heat. Coppola, a former social worker in Wake County, called a local radio station and several newspapers to talk about the dispute. She requested time to appear before the Concord Board of Aldermen at its Thursday meeting.

And Coppola said she contacted the Concord/Cabarrus County Chamber of Commerce to say she planned to write companies thinking of locating here. She said she planned to tell them `Concord is a hostile city toward families with young children.` However, after missing one day`s pickup, three city workers came to her home in a truck about 2 p.m. March 28 and took away her garbage, including diapers. Still, Coppola had no assurance her garbage would be picked up the following week. But word from Sossamon came Wednesday, she said, that her garbage, including disposable diapers, would be collected. Her persistence paid off, she said. ``But I`m still a bit frustrated that it took all this time and effort to get the city to change its mind,`` said Coppola, who will appear before the aldermen Thursday.

Sossamon says Coppola`s garbage collections are continuing only while the city studies its policy.

FINANCING OF REFERENDUM REMAINS TO BE SETTLED

Author: Lisa Pullen

Whether CHOICE's proposed financing of Concord's upcoming liquor-by-the-drink referendum is legal depends on who you talk to. The Concord Board of Aldermen, with a unanimous 7-0 vote, Thursday night called for a liquor-by-the-drink referendum after supporters of the referendum offered to pay for the election. The pro-referendum CHOICE group said it would bear the $3,400 cost of the referendum through contributions.

On Friday, opinions differed as to whether such financing of the election is proper. "It's the opinion of this office that elections must be paid for with tax revenues," said Alex Brock, state elections director, from Raleigh. "I don't know of any authorization for a citizens group to pay for an election. That hardly is a pure process in the democratic process."

Brock says the question of private groups financing an election has surfaced perhaps a dozen times in his 20-year career and his position is that it cannot be done. Groups can, under state law, make a contribution to the general fund of a town or city to be used for the election, but "we're not talking about doing something one way because you can't do it another," said Brock. "Whether that would prove a surreptitious way, I don't know."

Leonard Sossamon, Concord city manager, said he had checked with officials with the League of Municipalities and the state attorney general's office Thursday after learning of the CHOICE offer. "They don't see any problem with it," he said. "It's my understanding under state law, private organizations, charitable organizations, whatever, can make donations and gifts to cities, counties and governments," he said. "The CHOICE group, in effect, is making a contribution to the city."

Sossamon said that CHOICE would make a donation to the city, which would go into city coffers. The city in turn would write the county Board of Elections a check to cover the costs of the election, which Alderman Lamar Barrier said at Thursday night's meeting would be between $3,474 and $3,919 depending on the number of helpers needed.

James Wallace Jr., assistant state attorney general, whose office would deliver the ultimate opinion on the issue, said Friday he was not sure the question was addressed in state statutes. His office will not give an opinion unless formally asked for one by a city official and that had not happened, he said. "I would say it's a very unique question and situation," he said. "Before I put time into researching it, I need an inquiry from an official."

The Cabarrus County Board of Elections will meet early Monday morning to receive the aldermen's request for the election and probably will discuss the matter of financing then, said Chairman Ken Kiser. The aldermen requested a March 18 date for the referendum and the board also will decide the date Monday. ``My personal gut feeling is it`s not legal,`` said Kiser. ``I don`t think that a private organization can pay for an election. I never heard of it.``

City attorney Gordon Belo could not be reached Friday.

CHOICE Cochairman Phil Smith said Friday his group ``was going on the assumption that it`s all legal.`` ``The offer was made and it was accepted by the aldermen with the city attorney there,`` Smith said. ``I assume it`s a legal contribution. It was made in good faith and accepted.``

City Managers Take Reins.

Author: Lynn Casey and Lisa Pullen

It was a year for city managers: McCombs came to Kannapolis and Leonard Sossamon took the post in Concord.

The Kannapolis City Council hired McCombs Aug. 15 to manage the newly incorporated town of 30,000. He began work Nov. 1. Since 1975, McCombs had been city manager in Staunton, Va. He had also been city manager of Lumberton and assistant city manager in Greensboro. McCombs topped a field of 108 candidates for the job, and council members insisted his Kannapolis roots had little bearing on his selection. He is a Kannapolis native, his parents still live here and his wife also is from Kannapolis. His first day on the job, McCombs was greeted with coffee and biscuits from a grateful Kannapolis City Council, glad to have a manager on board. ``It's going to be difficult to determine where to start, but I'm excited about it,`` he said.

Concord also got a new city manager, Leonard Sossamon. Sossamon, who was Concord planning director for five years, replaced G.L. Greeson, who resigned in January. He was appointed interim manager Jan. 11, then named full-time city manager Feb. 14. Sossamon, a Cabarrus County native, graduated from Mount Pleasant High School in 1968.
