Mayor's Message

In the wake of recent tragedies, school shootings, political violence, and the growing tide of hateful and divisive rhetoric, our hearts are heavy, and fear is widespread. Yet I believe that even in heartbreak, there is power. Broken hearts can be a catalyst for healing and transformation, one person and one act of kindness at a time.

Now more than ever, we must step away from our screens and engage in courageous, face-to-face conversations, especially with those whose views differ from our own. No one should live in fear because of their beliefs. As your Mayor, I don't take sides. I strive to embrace change, listen deeply, and understand diverse perspectives, and I can continue to do that while remaining true to my core values.

We've come together through heartbreak and hardship before, and I believe we can do it again. In times of tragedy, we've shown what it means to be united, offering support, extending grace, and standing shoulder to shoulder. I encourage each of you to tap into that same compassion and empathy that I know lives within all of us. It's in those moments of connection that understanding begins.

We've come together through heartbreak and hardship before, and I believe we can do it again. In times of tragedy, we've shown what it means to be united, offering support, extending grace, and standing shoulder to shoulder.

Let us not allow today's challenges to divide us further. May our compassion be as natural and visible as our strength.

Together, we are better.

Mayor Julie Maas-Russke
