We move into our home nine years ago with the anticipation of it being our final retirement home. We chose this location because of the rural and serene appeal.

We immediately applied for re-instatement of the agricultural exemption the previous owners had and were granted the exemption. Although we only have ten acres, we have had up to six head of cattle and as many as four horses.

We are concerned that development of the adjacent agriculturally use property will later impact our ability to retain our livestock and maybe a liability if curious children get too close to the fence or cross over it.

The rural draw of this community is being sacrificed with the additional loss of farm and ranch land to developers.
