Sandpoint THROUGH THE AGES

Sandpoint has historically benefited from its strategic geographic location as a link between water and land-based transportation routes. Sand Point, as it was known, was a meeting ground and trading center for local Native American tribes when early explorers and trappers visited the region. In 1822, as the construction work on the Northern Pacific railroad began, a small settlement called "Red Oreille" developed on the site of Sand Creek. With the arrival in 1822 of the Great Northern Pacific Railroad, the community grew and this rustic, rough and lumber Sandpoint, as it was known, grew to encompass the east and west sides of Sand Creek and at the same time developed a more refined and family oriented nature. The Village of Sandpoint was incorporated on February 7, 1907.

The forests, farms and ranch lands, as well as rich mineral deposits in the Lake Pend Oreille region attracted settlers to small communities as they began to form throughout the area. Sandpoint continued to grow as a regional commercial center. Timber became the main industry in Sandpoint and Kootenai. The Humboldt Lumber Company mill as well as others thrived in Sandpoint into the late 1920s.

The first two-story brick connecting Sandpoint with Sagle was completed in 1910. At the time it was the largest wooden wagon bridge in the world. The Pend Oreille was built in 1927 to enhance entertainment options for area residents, making a total of 12 bridges in town. The 1940s through Farragut Naval Station and 200,000 servicemen to the area. In 1953, Schwabacher East side opened. North Idaho's many unpopulated areas, natural beauty and diverse recreational opportunities began to attract a new wave of families from outside the region in the 1970s.

Between the 1980s and present day, the Sandpoint area transitioned from a resource-based economy of logging, mining, farming and ranching to a more diversified economy. That new economy includes arts and culture, manufacturing, recreation, technology, aerospace, commercial services, education and small-scale horticulture while logging and mining have diminished.

This booklet provides a self-guided tour that highlights some of the historic buildings that were built during the history of Sandpoint and Bonner County.
