1. Public Hearing #1 - HB 581 Homestead Tax Exemption Opt-Out Consideration

City Manager Edmondson gave an overview of HB 581 to include the Georgia Municipal Association synopsis of House Bill 581.

City Council members engaged in a thorough and detailed discussion regarding the potential implications of opting in or out, recognizing that each decision would have profound and farreaching effects on the city's future. The conversation included concerns about the city's ability to retain its current residents, with several members emphasizing the importance of maintaining a stable and engaged community. At the same time, they explored strategies for attracting new residents to foster growth and economic development.

The council also examined the potential consequences for renters, noting the complexities of how either decision could impact their housing options and affordability. A key concern was whether the proposed changes may or may not hurt renters in the city. Furthermore, the council discussed the specific impact on seniors and individuals on fixed incomes, acknowledging that any changes could disproportionately affect these vulnerable groups. Members expressed a need to carefully consider how the city could protect and support these residents, ensuring that their well-being is not compromised in the process.

The City Manager provided an overview of which cities in the region have chosen to opt in or opt out. It was collectively agreed that a set of conditions should be outlined to guide a more informed decision on the matter. Additionally, the council emphasized the importance of developing a strategic plan that would allow the city to proactively address the issue, regardless of the final decision. The primary goal is to ensure that the chosen course of action is beneficial to the community as a whole.
