

Title: "A Split Lifetime"

Size: 30" by 24"

Material: Acrylic paint

Description: This painting I made when I was starting college in 2018. This is a painting of the beautiful mountains I see when I visit my family in Mexico and in the sky there is an angel that is supposed to be my mother who passed away when I was young, a reason I go to Mexico is to visit my mothers grave because she was buried there. The figures in the middle represent me and how I was feeling during my life at a time where I felt I needed her.

Title: "Abuelito"

Size: 30" by 24"

Material: Acrylic paint

Description: This is a painting of my grandfather looking at his field of crops in Mexico. My grandpa has a lot of land and was known for taking walks everyday to look at his crops because he loved his "siembrita" is what he called it. I started painting this after his passing 3 years ago. I am still working on this painting and adding more details to the field and background.

Title: "Si Yo Fuera Katrina"

Size:

Material: Acrylic paint

Description: This is a painting I am currently working on. It symbolizes the famous Katrina from Mexican culture that is seen during the Day of the Dead celebrations. People paint their faces and dress up to welcome their loved ones that have passed. In my painting I am still working on making my background look like a picture I took of a beautiful sunset on one of my visits to Mexico. I will still be adding details to the mountains and clouds to the sky. I will also be designing the dress of Katrina and adding more flowers to her hair. I will also be working on the hand holding the wine glass.

My love of painting has driven me to create many beautiful scenes for friends and family but unfortunately I have always forgotten to take a picture of the paintings I have gifted to others that would have been perfect for a portfolio.

Here are a few examples I found
